

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2026

Feud between Trump, TV news escalates

White House ban sparks lawsuit, show of solidarity among rival networks

By Jim Puzzanghera
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — President Trump has long battled with the mainstream news media, which he routinely derides as “fake news,” but the dispute has escalated to new levels in recent days.

Now, following Trump’s sudden announcement on Friday he would ban three news organizations from covering the White House, the five major TV networks are suspending their joint coverage of some of his events. The decision removes some of the toughest questioners from small settings like the Oval Office, where Trump often spars with reporters.

The show of solidarity from the networks marks a rare instance of the White House press corps standing up to Trump in a unified way and the sort of collective action many of the president’s critics have called for in the face of his attacks on the media in the past.

Obama speaks in Salem
Former president says Trump’s move imperils First Amendment ideals. B1.

“The public has a vital interest in receiving accurate, independent information about its government. No administration should restrict a news organization because it objects to its reporting,” the networks said in a joint statement on Monday.

Monday’s move by ABC, CBS, CNN, FOX, and NBC, which form the White House TV press pool, came after Trump banned CNN, MSNOW, and Politico from the White House for what he claimed was unfavorable coverage. Reporters from those outlets were denied entry to the White House on Saturday. The Trump administration was notified on Monday those three outlets were filing a lawsuit that they said in a joint statement was “to protect our First Amendment rights and defend the principle that the government does not decide what the press reports or publishes.”

“This ban could not be a more direct assault on the First Amendment nor a more blatant violation of our most fundamental constitutional principles,” the news organizations

MEDIA, Page A4

Man found guilty of attempted murder

Jury rejects insanity plea in shootings of 3 Palestinians

By Paul Heintz
GLOBE STAFF

BURLINGTON, Vt. — A jury convicted Jason Eaton of three counts of attempted second-degree murder Monday in the shootings of three Palestinian students in November 2023, rejecting his claims that he was legally insane at the time.

The verdict brought to a close a case that drew international attention nearly two months into the Israel-Gaza war, as authorities warned of a resulting rise in Islamophobia and antisemitism.

Although Eaton, 51, of Burlington, was never charged with a hate crime, prosecutors suggested during the weeklong trial that he had been driven by bias. His attorneys maintained he had suffered from a psychotic disorder and had been driven to act by voices in his head.

The victims, Hisham Awartani, Kinnan Abdalhamid, and Tahseen Aliahmad, were 20-year-old college students who had befriended one another at school in the West Bank. They had been visiting Awartani’s grandmother over Thanksgiving break when they took a stroll through a residential

SHOOTINGS, Page A10

Clancy’s team seeks probe of holdout juror

Judge asked to examine questionnaire, phone data

By Shelley Murphy and Travis Andersen
GLOBE STAFF

Lindsay Clancy’s legal team is urging the judge who presided over her trial for the slayings of her three children to conduct “a limited inquiry” into a juror who was the lone holdout pushing for her conviction, leading to a mistrial.

► Patrick Clancy’s “60 Minutes” interview moved beyond the spectacle of the trial. D1.

The motion filed by Clancy’s lead attorney, Kevin Reddington, asks the judge to scrutinize a wide array of material, including: the confidential questionnaire the juror filled out before being seated on the jury; cellphone records showing how much time he spent texting and calling people during deliberations; and court records related to his criminal history and a civil restraining order.

Plymouth Superior Court Judge William F. Sullivan has yet to rule on Reddington’s request that he hear arguments on the motion during a hearing Sept. 29 on the status of Clancy’s case. He

CLANCY, Page A7

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

Amarilys Marrero (center), an immigration attorney in Quincy, joined protesters at Boston’s City Hall Plaza last week.

Once safe in immigration courts, minors now face deportations

New judges, rules ignore humanitarian protections, paths to residency

By Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio
GLOBE STAFF

CHELMSFORD — The 17-year-old girl sat before the immigration judge, her hands fidgeting nervously.

She had come to the United States by herself earlier this year from Guatemala, where she’d left school after fifth grade to work in the fields and often went hungry. After crossing the southern border, she spent five months in a shelter, and then was released to stay with an older brother in Greater Boston.

A Massachusetts court had already determined she’d been abandoned by both her parents, which is normally the first step in a long bureaucratic journey toward permanent residency for “unaccompanied minors” like her. It’s a process that mostly plays out on a separate track from immigration court proceedings. In the past, she might have expected to have her deportation case closed or delayed as she worked toward obtaining a green card.

Instead, the judge said she had to leave the country.

“The court is ordering you removed to Guatemala,” the judge said. “Do you understand?”

“Sí,” the girl replied. She left the courtroom, burying her face in her hands.

For decades, the United States has largely

DEPORT, Page A7

The condemned canine of Vt.

Plot thickens for ex-official and her off-the-leash, on-the-lam dog

By Paul Heintz
GLOBE STAFF

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Moose, the brindle lab mix who unleashed a years-long reign of terror in the suburbs of this city, has been sentenced to death.

If only the executioners can find him.

The 65-pound mutt has been involved in at least seven attacks in northwest Vermont in the last three years, biting four adults and knocking over a child, according to public records obtained this summer by the Globe. Since then, Moose’s legal status has grown ever more precarious due to the actions of his owner, Diane Wheeler, who until this week served as a state prosecutor.

Wheeler’s neighbors say she repeatedly ignored Burlington’s orders to keep the 8-year-old dog out of the neighborhood where she’s lived with her mother, and former colleagues say she refused to keep him away from the prosecutor’s office. Now, the city is stepping in again to put the matter — and Moose himself — to rest.

In an order issued Monday, Burlington’s quasi-judicial Animal Control Committee said Moose must be immediately

DOG, Page A10

SUMMER SETTING

STAN GROSSFELD/GLOBE STAFF

As a change of seasons arrives, the pulse slows and the crowds thin on Nantucket, allowing the unalloyed beauty of the island to radiate. As I See It, B1.

Fair swell

Tuesday: Sun late, breezy.
High 60-65, low 53-58.

Wednesday: More wind.
High 60-65, low 52-57.

Weather and comics, D5-6.
Obituaries, C10.

Equipment woes delayed nearly 500 flights at Logan Airport, and travel disruptions were expected to continue Tuesday. B1.

For Sox, many magic moments helped turn around the year. C1.

VOL. 310, NO. 84

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

The Nation

DAILY BRIEFING

Ex-Haitian official appears in court

MIAMI — A former Haitian government official and more than a dozen other people appeared Monday in federal court in Miami on charges related to the 2021 assassination of Haitian President Jovenel Moïse.

Joseph Badio, a former Haiti Ministry of Justice employee, was brought into the Florida court in a wheelchair. The hearing happened a day after he and 17 others described as Colombian mercenaries were flown to the United States from Haiti, where they had been in custody.

They're among 30 people charged in the indictment, including Christian Sanon, a Palm Beach County, Fla., resident and dual Haitian-American citizen who was already preparing to face trial next week. South Florida served as a central location for planning and financing the plot to oust Moïse and replace him with someone of the conspirators' choosing, US authorities have alleged.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

New trial sought in Ind. teens case

An attorney for a man serving 130 years in prison for killing two teen girls in Indiana said police were so determined to find him guilty, they used confessions gathered while he suffered from psychosis and withheld from trial a witness sketch that looked nothing like him.

Jurors convicted Richard Allen of murder in 2024 in the deaths of Abigail Williams, 13, and Liberty German, 14. The case in the tiny town of Delphi went unsolved for more than five years before Allen was arrested, becoming a magnet for true-crime enthusiasts.

After Allen told investigators he had been on the trail near where the girls died, authorities found any way they could to convict him and make sure no evidence surfaced that any other man was on that walkway, attorney Mark Leeman told a three-judge panel of the Indiana Court of Appeals on Monday.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Teen's lawyer: Few allegation details

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — The attorney for a North Carolina girl accused of helping two teens who carried out a deadly attack on a San Diego mosque says prosecutors haven't provided enough information to allow him to defend his client.

Sarah Santiago, 17, is charged as an adult with three counts of murder by aiding and abetting and one count of conspiracy. Prosecutors say she helped California teens Cain Clark and Caleb Vazquez, who shot and killed three people at the Islamic Center of San Diego on May 18 before killing themselves.

Prosecutors allege Santiago agreed in advance to record and distribute a livestream of the attack made by the shooters.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Firefighting copter crashes; 2 dead

Two helicopter pilots were killed when their aircraft crashed Sunday afternoon while conducting water drops on a wildfire at Yosemite National Park, officials say.

The pilots were the only people on board and were employed by the contract aircraft company Precision. One of the pilots was Greg King, who used to work for the Alaska Division of Forestry & Fire Protection and fought several wildland fires in that state before moving to Precision, said agency spokesperson Emery Johnson.

King's close relatives work at the agency and gave their permission to release his name, Johnson said. The identity of the second pilot has not yet been released.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Austin man called not target of ICE

He allegedly fled after agents tried to arrest him

By Hamed Aleaziz and Billy Witz
NEW YORK TIMES

The man shot by an Immigration and Customs Enforcement agent in Austin, Texas, on Sunday was not the target of a federal investigation before the encounter, according to two people familiar with the shooting.

ICE agents were in the area checking license plates when they discovered that the man, Wilber Rafael Garces Perez, 28, of Venezuela, had a deportation order on file, said the two people, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak about the investigation.

ICE agents pulled Garces Perez over around 12:45 p.m. while he was making DoorDash deliveries and told him they were ICE agents and that he was going to be arrested. Garces Perez fled in his car after that, the two people said.

A short chase ensued before ICE agents encountered Garces Perez again, they said. The shooting occurred after that. Garces Perez was shot in the torso and taken to an area hospital and later released into ICE custody. The Department of Homeland Security said he was in stable condition. He is being held at the South Texas ICE Processing Center in Pearsall, Texas, his lawyer said.

Garces Perez was being questioned at the processing center and has been denied pain medication for a bullet that remained lodged in his back, said Juan Proaño, the chief executive of the League of United Latin American Citizens, a Latino civil rights organization.

Speaking by phone during a news conference, Garces Perez said doctors didn't remove the bullet because it's near his spine. He said ICE pressed for him to be released quickly from the hospital so it could move him to a detention center. He said he had received no pain medication or treatment there, and had slept on the floor, before eventually being given a "pill" by a nurse on Monday.

Garces Perez's car was "sideswiped" twice by ICE officers in an unmarked truck, immigration attorney Kate Lincoln-Goldfinch told reporters Monday. Garces Perez said ICE officers didn't ask him to stop or turn on any flashing lights until after they had sideswiped him. He said he did a U-turn and was trying to park when the officers

ERIC GAY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Flowers were placed near the site where a Venezuelan man was shot in his car by an ICE officer Sunday in Austin, Texas. Attorney Kate Lincoln-Goldfinch said the car of her client, Wilber Rafael Garces Perez, was sideswiped twice by ICE agents.

rammed his car and shot him in the back of the neck.

The shooting was the second in Texas by an ICE agent since July and the latest in a series of violent episodes involving federal immigration agents across the country. More than 20 people have been shot at by ICE since President Trump took office last year, nearly all of them in their cars, and some fatally.

DHS's Homeland Security Investigations, along with the FBI, are leading the investigation into the shooting of Garces Perez, a spokesperson for DHS said.

Calls for an independent investigation have mounted following the encounter. Mayor Kirk Watson of Austin denounced the shooting at a news conference Sunday. Representative Greg Casar, a Democrat whose congressional district includes Austin, sent a letter to Markwayne Mullin, the secretary of homeland security, that called for the immediate release of unedited video footage and the sharing of all available evidence with local and state law enforcement.

"DHS has repeatedly lied about the facts following violent encounters involving agents and have blamed victims," Casar wrote in his letter. "As a result, any narrative from DHS regarding this shooting must be viewed with deep skepticism."

Jose Garza, the district attorney for Travis County, which includes Austin, said his office and the Austin Police Department should be equal partners in the investigation and asked for the federal government to provide access to evidence gathered by DHS and the FBI.

RONALDO SCHEIDT/APF VIA GETTY IMAGES

James Talarico, who is the Democratic nominee for Senate, also called for an independent investigation and the release of all video footage.

Videos of the shooting, which circulated on social media and were verified by The New York Times, captured audio of sirens blaring and tires screeching before the blue Toyota Corolla driven by Garces Perez and an unmarked Ford SUV driven by a federal immigration officer were seen. Both vehicles were stopped and facing in opposite directions.

The videos show an officer exiting the driver's side of the unmarked SUV and circling around to the back passenger side of the Toyota. The immigration officer remains to the side of the vehicle as it rolls forward slightly. Three gunshots can be heard, and the Toyota continues moving forward slowly before coming to a stop. The video then shows the officer running to the driver's side of the vehicle.

Lincoln-Goldfinch said Perez entered the United States legally in 2024 after using CBP One, a program begun under President Biden that set up appointments with US authorities to be considered for asylum. President Trump ended the program on his first day in office.

She said he was an asylum seeker and had a valid work permit, but a judge issued a deportation order for him after he missed a hearing in immigration court because the hearing notice was sent to a former address.

Material from the Associated Press is included in this report.

Quietly, ICE hiding locations of many detainees

Thousands with final removal orders affected

By Ryan J. Foley
ASSOCIATED PRESS

US Immigration and Customs Enforcement has stopped publicly revealing where it is holding thousands of detainees who are subject to final deportation orders, an unannounced move that has made it far more difficult for lawyers and relatives to find them, according to current and former officials familiar with the practice.

ICE removed those detainees from its online detainee locator system on Sept. 15, according to three current and former ICE officials who spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the change. Several lawyers contacted by the Associated Press confirmed their clients vanished from the system this week, and the American Immigration Lawyers Association warned its members about the situation Friday.

The move represents a stark departure from previous practice and highlights the headline nature of President Trump's immigration crackdown, leaving thousands of detainees exceedingly hard to trace and potentially unable to exercise all of their legal options.

The practice, which applies to detainees who have received final orders of removal from an immigration court, could speed deportations by making last-minute legal challenges harder to pursue, immigration lawyers said. Nearly 16,000 people who were arrested and booked into ICE detention in July were subject to final removal orders, more than a third of the overall bookings, according to ICE data obtained by the Deportation Data Project based at U.C. Berkeley and UCLA.

The practice does not apply to detainees held at a detention facility in Adelanto, Calif., or at temporary holding facilities in Minneapolis, New York City, or suburban Chicago, the sources said. Judges have ordered ICE to list detainees in those facilities in the online locator promptly upon their arrival, as part of litigation over their detention practices.

The effort to hide their locations adds to the ways in which the Trump administration has made life harder for detainees and their families as it has in-

‘To me, it’s just another iteration of disappearing people. Why would we do that [in the USA]?’

MICHELLE MENDEZ,
legal director at the National Immigration Project

creased pressure on them to waive appeals and agree to deportation.

ICE did not publicize the move and in a statement issued to the AP, the agency did not confirm or deny it. The statement said detainees with final removal orders were being prioritized for deportation, even as ICE faces a "historic number of injunctions" from courts stopping individual removals.

As a result of the change, lawyers and relatives lost track of their clients and loved ones without explanation, which is especially concerning because detainees are frequently moved to new facilities before deportation, said Greg Chen, senior director of government relations at the American Immigration Lawyers Association.

"Families are freaking out because they think the person has been deported and they don't know where the person might be," he said. "On the attorney side, this has serious implications for the ability to contact their client. It certainly has implications about how it will interfere with the attorney-client relationship."

The Department of Homeland Security, ICE's parent agency, has argued that people who are subject to final removal orders have received due process. That usually means an immigration judge has ordered their removal after a hearing, including cases when immigrants fail to show up, and the decision was affirmed on appeal or not appealed. Still, those detainees have options to challenge their detention and removal, including seeking to reopen the case or by bringing what's known as a habeas petition asking a judge to release them on constitutional grounds.

ICE detention facilities held more than 65,000 people as of early July, the most recent available data. Around 30 percent of them likely have final removal orders, said Michelle Mendez, legal director at the National Immigration Project.

More people have been issued final removal orders after failing to show up for hearings in recent months because the administration's immigration courts have taken steps to make it harder to participate and to reopen such cases, she said.

"To me, it's just another iteration of disappearing people," she said. "Why would we do that in the United States of America? It's something we'd hear about in another country and be concerned about individual rights and due process."

ICE initiated the online detainee locator system in 2010 to allow relatives, lawyers, and the public to search for people in custody.

The exclusion of detainees with final removal orders has no apparent parallel, several immigration lawyers said. Atenas Burrola Estrada, a deputy program director with the Amica Center for Immigrant Rights, said that "every single one of our clients who has a final order has disappeared from the locator," including 17 in all as of Monday.

The World

UN General Assembly to confront familiar crises

Global conflicts and AI also top agenda items

By Farnaz Fassihi
NEW YORK TIMES

World leaders will converge in New York this week for the United Nations General Assembly with the Middle East in turmoil, war raging between Russia and Ukraine, old alliances in peril, energy prices rising, and scientists warning that artificial intelligence could imperil humanity.

“It would be hard to imagine a scenario as threatening as the one we’re facing right now,” acknowledged António Guterres, who has served two terms as the UN secretary general since 2017 and will step down at the end of December.

The US-Israeli war with Iran and its reverberations on the world economy and oil supplies will be a major topic. And Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky is expected to implore world leaders not to forget his country.

But for the first time at the world body, the threat posed by artificial intelligence has jumped to the top of the agenda. UN leaders plan to seek global cooperation for guardrails around the rapidly advancing technology.

Against the backdrop of these challenges, the UN is searching for its next leader, who will take the helm in January. Seven candidates are in the running after Michelle Bachelet, former Chilean president and former high commissioner of the UN’s Human Rights Council, dropped out. But so far no clear front-runner has emerged, diplomats said, because the UN Security Council, the body responsible for selecting the secretary-general, has not reached a consensus.

Guterres will deliver his final address to the General Assembly on Tuesday, and he is expected to close his tenure by urging world leaders to defend international law, protect human rights, invest in sustainable development, and push for peace.

“At a time when the world faces three existential threats — runaway artificial intelligence, the climate crisis, and the intolerable deepening of inequalities — international cooperation is more necessary than ever,” Guterres said at a recent news conference.

He said that when he took charge of the institution years ago no one could have predicted that the world would be as it is today, roiled by conflicts and facing a multitude of crises like climate change and the seemingly unrestrained growth of artificial intelligence.

The UN has defined the theme of this year’s gathering as “Restoring Trust, Managing Transformations: A United Nations That Delivers for All.” Trust and transformation have been among the biggest challenges for the UN as it has faced questions of relevance from donors and the public, experienced severe funding cutbacks from the Trump administration and made efforts to streamline its operations. At the same time, its 15-member Security Council stands paralyzed by divisions among its five permanent members with veto-holding powers.

SPENCER PLATT/GETTY IMAGES

On Monday, law enforcement secured an entrance to the UN in New York City as world leaders convene this week.

Still, while the organization said in January that it was facing imminent financial collapse and would run out of money by the summer if member states — namely the United States, its top donor — didn’t pay their annual dues, it has survived.

Last week, the United States paid $725 million to the UN as part of its dues for the regular budget and $102 million for peacekeeping, but it still owes $1.3 billion in annual dues, said Farhan Haq, a UN spokesperson.

Many UN staff members and diplomats had expressed anxiety that President Trump could withdraw from the organization altogether, given his exit from UN agencies such as the World Health Organization and the defunding of some programs as part of a policy to cut foreign aid significantly. Analysts said last year that the UN was in a “free fall,” as it observed its 80th anniversary.

But those fears have not materialized.

Trump is set to speak to the General Assembly on Tuesday morning, the first day of the gathering. Last year, he lectured the United Nations and other countries about how they were failing and aired a list of grievances.

“Your countries are going to hell,” he said.

DAILY BRIEFING

KATERYNA KLOCHKO/ASSOCIATED PRESS

A rescue worker put out a fire at the Intrade trade center after a Russian drone strike on Zaporizhzhia, Ukraine, on Monday.

Russia targets Zaporizhzhia after Ukraine launches 1,000-drone barrage KYIV — Russian drones struck the southern Ukrainian city of Zaporizhzhia on Monday, a day after Kyiv’s forces fired more than 1,000 drones at Russia, officials said.

The relentless daily attacks underscore the lack of significant progress in diplomatic efforts to end the fighting more than four years after Russia invaded its neighbor.

There is no sign the war is abating as world leaders gather this week at the UN General Assembly. Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said he expects to meet with President Trump at the annual event in New York.

Trump on Monday called the war “ridiculous” and said Moscow had “unfortunately lost control” of its diesel oil production as Ukraine targets Russian refineries with long-range drones.

“A large number of (Russian) diesel refineries have been blown up and are, at least temporarily, out of commission,” he said in a social media post.

Earlier this month, Trump urged Zelensky to halt the refinery strikes, saying the attacks are causing a global shortage and price spikes.

Zelensky responded to Trump in a post on X, noting that Kyiv has offered “dozens of diplomatic proposals on how to end this war with dignity, guarantee security, and prevent new Russian invasions.”

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pakistan says it killed 28 militants

ISLAMABAD — Pakistani fighter jets on Monday struck sites in eastern Afghanistan that Pakistani officials described as suspected militant hideouts. Pakistan said 28 militants were killed, while authorities in Kabul reported at least three civilian deaths.

The strikes near the countries’ shared border marked a renewed escalation in tensions, raising the prospect of further cross-border hostilities. They also threatened to complicate mediation efforts by regional powers, including China.

The strikes came after Pakistan warned that it could target militants inside Afghanistan following two deadly attacks on Pakistani security forces near the border in recent days.

The United Nations Mission in Afghanistan said in a post on X that it had confirmed that “at least three civilians, including a man, a woman and a girl, were killed and four injured in apparent airstrikes” in Afghanistan’s Kunar province in the early hours of Monday.

UNAMA said it had documented more than 1,100 civilian deaths and injuries in Afghanistan from cross-border violence so far this year.

“We reiterate our call for respect for international humanitarian law to prevent civilian casualties,” it added.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Shootout outside Ontario synagogue

BELLEVILLE, Ontario — A 29-year-old man armed with a shotgun opened fire on a police officer stationed outside an Ontario synagogue during Yom Kippur, triggering a shootout involving as many as 30 shots, the province’s police watchdog said Monday.

The gunfire left the man with life-threatening injuries and seriously wounded a veteran of the Belleville Police Service, whose condition had stabilized as he recovered in intensive care.

Kristy Denette, a spokesperson for the Special Investigations Unit, said nearby vehicles and homes were riddled with bullet holes. There was no forensic confirmation Monday as to whether the synagogue itself was hit.

Denette said the scene appeared to stretch about half a block from the Sons of Jacob Synagogue.

“It would have been quite, quite the scene indeed,” Denette said.

The Special Investigations Unit said preliminary evidence showed the man arrived in a truck around 7 p.m. on Sunday and fired at an officer outside the Sons of Jacob Synagogue in Belleville, about 110 miles east of Toronto. The officer returned fire before a second officer arrived and also fired.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pope will retrace his missionary footsteps in Peru

ROME — Pope Leo XIV will retrace his steps as a missionary priest when he returns to Peru in November on his longest trip to date that will also take him to Uruguay and Argentina, where his Argentine predecessor Pope Francis never returned.

The Vatican on Monday published the detailed itinerary for Leo’s first visit to Latin America as pope. The Nov. 6-17 trip will be a homecoming for the US-born pontiff who also has Peruvian citizenship and spent two decades there as a priest and bishop.

As he showed during his Africa trip in April, the 71-year-old Leo has no qualms about covering vast distances and working late into the night when he’s on the road. In all, he’ll clock just over 19,000 miles of flight time during the trip, nearly double the 10,000 miles he traveled in Algeria, Cameroon, Angola, and Equatorial Guinea.

The visit begins in Uruguay, whose secular identity is so deeply rooted that Christmas is officially Family Day and Holy Week is Tourism Week. His itinerary includes a stop at a parish in Casavalle, a poor neighborhood on the outskirts of the capital plagued by drug trafficking and gang violence.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

A restaurant worker wore a T-shirt depicting Pope Leo XIV, in Lima this month.

A Taiwan arms deal could upend fragile US-China relations

Delays could drag on island’s military goals

By Chris Buckley and Amy Chang Chien
NEW YORK TIMES

TAIPEI — For China’s leader, Xi Jinping, one important goal of his meeting with President Trump this week may be persuading him to keep delaying $14 billion in proposed US arms sales to Taiwan.

China has long claimed the self-governed island of Taiwan as its territory, and Taipei has relied on US military power to counter military threats from Beijing. When they last met, Xi warned Trump that mishandling tensions over Taiwan could be “extremely dangerous” for the United States and China, a reminder of the risk of crisis between two nuclear-armed powers.

“There’s only one issue that could cause relations between both sides to break down completely or erupt in conflict, and that is Taiwan,” said Xin Qiang, the director of the Center for Taiwan Studies at Fudan University in Shanghai.

“Demanding a continued delay in any arms sales may be the most critical issue,” he said.

Trump has described the arms sale plan as a source of leverage with China. After his May summit with Xi in Beijing, Trump said he had discussed the deal with the Chinese leader. “It’s a very good negotiating chip for us, frankly,” he said then.

Trump has since held off approving the package of missiles, antidrone weaponry, and air-defense systems. His administration has also muted public references to Taiwan: Officials, including Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth, have conspicuously avoided mentioning Taiwan in speeches.

For Beijing, Trump’s willingness to delay arms sales is already a gain. In Washington, Xi could hint at potential costs if Trump approves the sale, including more restrictions on Chinese rare earth exports. Xi could also signal that he might skip the Group of 20 summit in Miami in December, which Trump will preside over.

Trump, for his part, may want China to increase pressure on Iran to reopen the Strait of Hormuz, the critical waterway for global oil and gas supplies that Iran has effectively blocked since the war began in February.

“I think in Beijing we saw the opening move in what will be a sophisticated play to get the Trump administration to reduce support for Taiwan,” said David Sacks, a fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations who studies US relations with Taiwan and China. “Xi will use his meetings with Trump in Washington to continue to implement this strategy.”

Delayed arms sales are a political headache for Taiwan’s president, Lai Ching-te. He has promoted increased military spending and purchases of American weapons, in part to meet the Trump administration’s own demands that partners invest more in their defense. Trump’s stalling could make it harder for Lai to defend his agenda.

Longer delays could drag on the island’s military goals, partly by pushing Taiwan further back in the line for orders of scarce military hardware, some experts said.

“Ultimately, it’s a game of the Chinese trying to prolong this process as long as possible, with the idea being that if China can make gains faster than Taiwan can acquire capabilities, then the balance continues to tilt in Beijing’s favor,” said Ryan Hass, a former director for China at the National Security Council and a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution.

Some experts said they expected Trump to keep holding off approval of any arms sales for Taiwan until at least late this year. Others said the green light for some weapons could come sooner. Republicans and Democrats in Congress are likely to raise pressure on the administration to approve the proposed arms sales after the summit, Sacks said.

The arms issue has highlighted Taiwan’s struggles to keep Trump onside. Taiwan does not have formal diplomatic relations with the United States, and Trump’s highly personalized, freewheeling style makes it more difficult for Taiwan to understand and shape US decision-making, experts say.

“With an administration that is so top-down, I think that is hindering the Taiwanese ability to get a really good sense of what’s going on and the ability to help shape and influence that,” said Laura Rosenberger, a former Biden administration official who oversaw US policies on China and Taiwan.

In his first term, Trump signed off on about $18 billion of arms sales to Taiwan, and hawkish members of his government focused on Beijing as a long-term threat. But in his second term, Trump has emphasized pragmatic ties with China, largely retreating from a trade war after Beijing strangled exports of rare earths that are crucial for smartphones and advanced technology.

Feud between president, TV news escalates

►MEDIA
Continued from Page A1

said in their suit, filed in US District Court in Washington, DC.

A hearing is scheduled on Wednesday. The case has been assigned to Judge Timothy Kelly, a Trump appointee who heard a similar case during his first administration. In 2018, Trump banned CNN reporter Jim Acosta from the White House. Kelly ordered the reinstatement of Acosta's White House credential, saying the White House had not followed a transparent enough process in revoking it.

Trump blasted the networks and the judge on Truth Social, the social media platform he owns.

“Virtually every story about me, or anything having to do with me, is negative, wrong and, in many cases, DANGEROUS for our Country!” he posted Monday afternoon. “Why should I have to give ‘access’ to such people? Perhaps Judge Kelly could explain that!”

Trump also noted that Kelly “was, sadly, appointed by “TRUMP.”

On Monday, CNN was scheduled to provide the rotating pooled TV coverage, which the networks share with TV outlets around the world. When the White House prevented CNN from performing the duties on Monday, the four other networks suspended their participation in the TV pool.

In another protest, The Washington Post said it would not publish any photos of Trump from Monday until midnight, “joining a collective effort with photographers in other newsrooms covering the White House in a show of support of the banned outlets.” The New York Times soon followed suit.

The White House often provides its own video coverage of Trump's pooled events on its website. But didn't take long for people following the president — and perhaps Trump himself — to experience a small example of what the TV pool adds everyday.

During a ribbon-cutting for his new helipad on the White House lawn, the president could be seen gesturing, but without the TV pool's audio equipment, his words were drowned out by the helicopter behind him.

CHIP SOMODEVILLA/GETTY IMAGES

President Trump spoke to reporters about health care Friday in the Oval Office. Below, signs of support at the White House.

As footage of Trump talking — inaudibly — played on right-wing cable outlet Newsmax, one of the hosts observed of the president's standoff with the TV pool “ may be . . . backfiring just a little bit.”

The White House press pool was created decades ago to cover the president in small settings, such as the Oval Office and on Air Force One, where it's not feasible to allow every reporter who might want to be there. The press pool consists of about a dozen journalists representing print news, radio and audio outlets, TV networks, and photographers who perform the duties on a rotating basis and provide the information to all participating outlets.

The press pool is crucial to providing the public complete coverage of the president. For TV coverage in particular, the effort is not just an act of journalism, but a commitment of technical capability and resources.

FINN GOMEZ/GETTY IMAGES

“The networks literally built the infrastructure to transmit from the White House,” Weijia Jiang, a CBS News correspondent and last year's White House Correspondent's Association president, wrote on X. “They're the ones with the resources to do it daily. That includes a considerable amount for staff, equipment, & travel costs. We then pool footage to other outlets. It is a public service.”

Added Steven Portnoy, an ABC News Radio correspondent and another former association president: “The bottom line is, it's about you. . . . You, as an American, are better informed — and your leaders are more accountable to you — when they're questioned by reporters who are read, watched and listened to by all the various components of our society.”

The fallout from the TV pool boycott could continue to snowball.

Journalists traveling with the president to New York for the United Nations General Assembly also are lacking a TV pool, meaning there will be no independent video footage of what he says and does during his engagements there. Additionally, the president is scheduled to welcome Chinese President Xi Jinping to the White House this pad on Monday, attempting to brush aside a First Amendment firestorm even as major television networks kept their cameras away in protest of CNN being banned from the grounds.

Networks skip pool coverage of Trump's new White House helipad

WASHINGTON — President Trump showed off his new White House helicopter landing

POLITICAL NOTEBOOK

A light drizzle fell on the South Lawn as Trump used oversized gold scissors to cut a red, white, and blue ribbon. He then exchanged handshakes with officials and some members of a construction crew wearing green smocks and hard hats — seeking to portray business as usual.

If he had words to mark the occasion, however, it was impossible to hear them over the noise of his waiting helicopter. Normally, TV network crews work to capture clearer audio.

Trump didn't answer reporters' shouted questions before climbing aboard Marine One on his way to New York. Instead, he wrote on his social media site, “We are just leaving the White House Lawn on the maiden voyage from the newly built, and very beautiful, Heliport!”

MS Now, Politico, and CNN have sued after Trump announced Friday that he was banning them from covering the White House in a clear escalation of Trump's long-running efforts — in the courts and through administrative action — to restrict news coverage he finds objectionable.

CNN normally participates in a five-network rotation that provides pooled footage of daily events at the White House. When the network was barred from taking its assigned turn on Monday, ABC, CBS, NBC, and Fox News agreed collectively to the extraordinary step of skipping Trump's helipad ceremony.

Trump has long crowed about how the new helipad — featuring extensive granite that he boasts will have a “million-year life,” as well as a large insignia reading the “Seal of the President of the United States” — would impress Chinese President Xi Jinping, who arrives Wednesday for a state visit.

Igniting constitutional questions over media access also eclipsed the reason Trump was lifting off from the helipad — the annual trip to attend the United Nations General Assembly beginning on Tuesday.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GOP enter final midterm stretch with a financial edge

WASHINGTON — Republicans are facing a harsh political environment, but they enter the final weeks of the midterm elections with the financial upper hand.

The party and its allies are planning to spend about $221 million more on advertising than Democrats and their allies through Election Day, according to AdImpact, a media tracking firm. That total takes into account spending on Senate, House, and state races.

And conservative outside groups and party committees hold a comfortable edge over their liberal counterparts in fund-raising, according to filings with the Federal Election Commission that were released Sunday.

President Trump's super political action committee, MAGA Inc., reported having $416 million on hand entering this month. In recent weeks, the group has begun spending some of that enormous war chest, helping give Republicans their big advertising advantage. There is no Democratic super PAC with nearly as much money as MAGA Inc.

Republicans' national party committees also have far more cash than their Democratic counterparts. The Republican National Committee entered this month with about $126 million on hand. The Democratic National Committee, which has faced internal chaos and struggled badly to raise money,

DAVE SANDERS/POOL/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

LEADERS CONVERGE — New York City Mayor Zohran Mamdani (second from left) spoke alongside Brazilian President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva to reporters after meeting in New York on Monday.

was $750,000 in debt.

The House Republicans' main campaign committee had an advantage in cash on hand of roughly $13 million over the House Democrats' committee. The equivalent committee for Senate Republicans trailed its Democratic counterpart in cash on hand — but that was only because the Republican group was spending earlier.

Democrats' one big financial advantage in the midterms has come at the candidate level: The party's Senate candidates have significantly outraised their Republican rivals in previous financial reports.

NEW YORK TIMES

Harris launches into the midterms as decision looms

As Kamala Harris mulls whether to run for president again, she's throwing herself into the midterms by campaigning with fellow Democrats, starting with a Tuesday trip to Michigan on behalf of Senate nominee Abdul El-Sayed.

It's an especially notable destination for the former vice president. Michigan was one of seven battlegrounds she lost to Donald Trump two years ago, and it's now one of six states that will start Democrats' next presidential nominating process. Harris has additional rallies scheduled in Nevada and Georgia, two other key places on the political map.

Her campaigning could serve to solidify or undermine her status as a potential Democratic front-runner. Although she's one of the nation's best-known politicians and a barrier-breaking figure, there are others eager to turn the page after she failed to defeat President Joe Biden on the top of the ticket.

“I think she's run her course,” said Barry Goodman, a Democratic National Committee member from Michigan who raised money for Biden and then Harris. “I just don't think her running again would be the right thing for America moving forward.”

Some Democratic candidates, especially in places Trump won handily, have curtly dismissed any possibility of campaigning with Harris. “No thanks,” Iowa gubernatorial nominee Rob Sand told Politico. “Let's move on. We need some new leadership.”

But plenty of Democrats, including some influential Black women who helped convince Biden to select Harris as his running mate in 2020, said she has more than earned the space to consider her options without being rushed or pilloried. Underscoring her unique position, California Governor Gavin Newsom recently told CNN that he would not seek the nomination if Harris does.

“Kamala isn't under any deadline to run for anything,” said Donna Brazile, a former Democratic National Committee chair who managed Al Gore's presidential campaign in 2000. She called it a “waste of time” to relitigate Harris's truncated 2024 campaign and said any White House hopefuls “should week and hold a state dinner, none of which will receive TV pool coverage if the ban persists.

With their big personalities and ease in front of the cameras, TV reporters often play an outsized role in the press pool in questioning the president. Former ABC News White House correspondent Sam Donaldson became famous in the 1980s for shouting questions to President Reagan when he would not stop to talk with reporters.

Trump takes a different approach, often engaging in lengthy question-and-answer sessions with journalists in the Oval Office, departing the White House, or on Air Force One. But he does not like to be challenged or asked tough questions.

The White House TV pool banded together before when its members believed a president was excluding one of them.

In 2009, the Treasury Department in the Obama administration made an official available for interviews to all of the White House TV pool networks except for Fox News. The networks said none of them would participate unless Fox News was included and the Obama administration relented.

Shortly after taking office for his second term, the White House took over determining “who gets to enjoy the very privileged and limited access” of the pool from the White House Correspondents Association, allowing additional access to outlets the administration favors.

The White House also eliminated the longstanding spot in the pool for a wire services reporter from the AP, Reuters, or Bloomberg. That decision came after Trump banned AP reporters because the global news organization would not agree to refer to the Gulf of Mexico by the administration's new name of the Gulf of America.

The AP sued and a judge ordered its reporters be reinstated, so the White House limited participation by wire services.

Globe reporter Tal Kopan contributed to this report. Jim Puzanghera can be reached at jim.puzanghera@globe.com.

follow Kamala's lead and get out there” by trying to help midterm candidates.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pritzker used a weight-loss drug to drop 80 pounds

WASHINGTON — Governor JB Pritzker of Illinois has traveled to early primary states.

He has started a political group to spend money to help Democrats in midterm races.

And now he has sent perhaps the clearest signal that he would like to run for president in 2028: sharing his weight-loss journey with the American people.

In an interview that aired Monday on “CBS Mornings,” Pritzker revealed that he had lost 80 pounds since beginning a GLP-1 regimen in 2024. In doing so, he joins a long line of White House hopefuls who got in better shape as part of their campaign preparations.

“I've been driven my whole life to lose weight,” Pritzker said in the CBS interview.

In a country where roughly 11 percent of the adult population is taking GLP-1s, using the drugs to lose weight could help Pritzker, a billionaire heir to the Hyatt hotel fortune, appear more relatable to Democratic voters who are skeptical of the ultrawealthy.

In the pre-GLP-1 era, presidential contenders who have lost large amounts of weight before beginning their campaigns include former governor Chris Christie of New Jersey, former governor Jeb Bush of Florida (both in 2016), and Senator Cory Booker of New Jersey (in 2020). When former vice president Al Gore lost weight in 2007, it set off rumors he would run for president again in 2008. He did not.

Pritzker, as is the custom, deflected any suggestion that his weight loss was related to any national political ambitions. He is running for a third term as governor this year.

NEW YORK TIMES

Alarm sounded on Amazon drones

Loud humming disturbs peaceful Dallas suburb

By Juliet Macur
NEW YORK TIMES

RICHARDSON, Texas — The sound came out of nowhere. It began as an unnerving high-pitched hum, like a mosquito flying around a dark room at bedtime, and it grew louder as it drew closer. A family lounging in a backyard pool in Richardson, Texas, just north of Dallas, couldn't help but notice it. "There's another one coming this way!" shouted Eric Anderson from his pool float, pointing to an area above a tall line of trees. His 9-year-old daughter, Isla, removed her swim goggles for a clearer look at what could be a scene from science fiction. Within a minute or so, an 83-pound drone with six blue arms and whirling propellers appeared in a corner of the sky before zipping over nearby houses, looking like a cross between a mechanical dragonfly and an X-wing fighter, and buzzing like a battalion of bees. The drone's mission: delivering an Amazon package. The single cardboard box of cargo held a maximum of 5 pounds and was loaded into the drone at Amazon's distribution center less than a mile from the backyard pool. It could have been bound for anywhere within a 7-mile radius of takeoff. Richardson city officials gave Amazon zoning approval to start the drone delivery service in December as part of the company's nascent Prime Air program. It promises customers tens of thousands of items — nail trimmers for pets, ankle bracelets, handcrafted, razor-tipped bread lames for scoring sourdough — in as little as 30 minutes. The delivery could be free or cost up to $4.99. The Federal Aviation Administration, which governs US airspace, gave Amazon clearance to fly its drones. Now many other parts of the United States can expect their own drone deliveries, a welcome convenience for some, but an invasion for others. Last month, Amazon announced that Prime Air deliveries would expand to 500 towns and cities by the end of the year. Other companies are also using drone deliveries, and the FAA has forecast that by 2030 the number could explode to more than 3.5 million, up from the current number of 897,000 registered drones. "What's happening in Richardson is about to happen all over the country, and people are finally going to believe us that having all these drones flying around is actually a big, big problem," said Scott Bratcher, who is the president of his homeowners' association in a Richardson neighborhood that residents have called a drone highway. He added, "The government and the FAA have failed us." The agency said that it would soon be issuing new rules for drone flight. But in July, after studying the environmental impact of commercial delivery drones like Amazon's, the agency decided that they did not pose a "significant impact." For some people, the futuristic novelty of the airborne deliveries has been something to celebrate. They have shared their delivery videos online, cheering as their packages are plopped, bounced, and sometimes slid on to their yards and driveways. Lindsay Hamilton, a spokesperson for Amazon, said Friday that the customer response to the deliveries has been "overwhelmingly positive" and "so far this year, fewer than 1 percent" of inquiries into the program have been related to noise. She compared the drone noise to a window fan on low, and said,

JORDAN VONDERHAAR/NEW YORK TIMES

A drone delivered a package from Amazon to Kristi Graham's home in Richardson, Texas, earlier this month.

during delivery, it's quieter than a passing car. But in the Richardson neighborhoods near the Amazon distribution center, any joy about the innovation has been muted by the sound of dozens of drones, if not more than a hundred of them, flying by every day, sometimes so loud that they sound like flying lawn mowers. (Other companies, including Walmart, are also using delivery drones, but different types, in the area.) Under city regulations, deliveries can operate from 7 a.m. until 8 p.m., and Amazon has assured residents that the drones would fly outbound at an average of 225 feet high. The maximum they can fly, according to the FAA, is 400 feet. For those people living closest to the Amazon flight paths, the ever-droning deliveries pose the most serious threat to their private and peaceful life. "We hear them zoom, zoom, zoom, back and forth from morning until past dinnertime," said Nikki Anderson, whose extended family spotted the drone — and many more — one Friday this month. She has long prized the serenity of her backyard, with its undulating pool and birds chirping from landscaping that included a shrub sculpted into the shape of a giant heart. Now the drones have ruined that, Anderson said. She can hear them from inside, even with the television on, and especially on weekends, when deliveries seem to pick up. During delivery, Amazon's drones descend to about 13 feet above the ground and hover as the package tumbles out of an open door and onto a customer's property — often with all the care of a bouncer tossing a rabble-rouser from a bar. One online video shows an Amazon drone dropping a package into a pool. Another caught one smashing into an apartment building and crashing near a sidewalk.

US would subsidize stay-at-home parents

Conservatives divided on White House plan

By Coral Davenport
NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — Republicans are sharply divided over a new plan being drafted by the Trump administration that would allow stay-at-home spouses to collect childcare subsidy payments from a federal program intended to assist working parents. Some commentators and lawmakers called the policy, which could help realize a vision of stay-at-home motherhood championed by Vice President JD Vance, a "grand slam," "no-brainer," and "President Trump's greatest legacy." Others eviscerated it as "socialism," "rank politics," and "stupid." The split reaction reflects one of the emerging fractures in President Trump's MAGA coalition. Traditional Republicans, religious conservatives, and America First populists have jostled for influence with the pronatalist movement, which aims for women to have more children and stay home to raise them, and supporters of Health Secretary Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s Make America Healthy Again movement. And the role of the federal government in shaping family policy has proved to be a key flashpoint. When news of the plan broke over Labor Day weekend, Rachel Campos-Duffy, the cohost of "Fox & Friends," declared on air, "I think this might be my favorite policy, like, ever, that Trump has brought." Campos-Duffy, the wife of Transportation Secretary Sean Duffy and a mother of nine, is a prominent voice in the pronatalist movement. She and others in the movement said the proposed subsidy would be the administration's largest step toward achieving pronatalists' goals. Conservative podcasts, broadcasts, and social media buzzed with excitement. A coterie of conservative lawmakers, some of whom have tried but failed to push through legislation to pay stay-at-home parents, including Senator Eric Schmitt of Missouri and Representative Anna Paulina Luna of Florida, cheered their support. But many on the right, even those who embrace Vance's promotion of traditional families, said that handing out government money to parents so they could stay at home would go against core conservative tenets. They also maintained that the proposal contradicted the administration's efforts to require Americans to work to get other forms of federal support. "Add work requirements here, but take them away there, just to use the power of the state to promote the family?" said Douglas Holtz-Eakin, an economist who served under President George W. Bush and now runs the American Action Forum, a conservative think tank. "A traditional conservative would say this is none of the government's business." If carried out, the transformation of the childcare subsidy program would be the federal government's most concrete policy for advancing the family structure championed by Vance, who since his days as an Ohio senator has called to reform childcare subsidies and to promote stay-at-home parents. Under the draft proposal being considered by the Trump administration, parents who stay home with their children could get a payment from an existing Health and Human Services Department fund set up to help low-income and working-class parents afford childcare so they could work or go to school, The New York Times previously reported.

Iran once hosted D.C. bashes

Revolution put an end to festivities, friendly relations

By Michael Crowley
NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — Long ago, before Iran officially banned alcohol, dancing, and public mingling between men and women, it threw some of the best parties Washington, D.C., has ever seen. The setting was the Iran ambassador's residence on D.C.'s Massachusetts Avenue, a Georgian mansion adjacent to Iran's Embassy featuring 14 fireplaces and a packed social calendar. Servants in white gloves poured Dom Pérignon into crystal glasses. Giant bowls overflowed with fresh beluga caviar. US officials mingled with the celebrity likes of Frank Sinatra, Barbra Streisand, and Andy Warhol. Presiding over these galas was Iran's ambassador to the United States, Ardeshir Zahedi. By day, Zahedi was a regular at the White House and the State Department. At night, he was a hedonistic host who graced local magazine covers and could be found dancing past 2 a.m. The good times would come to an abrupt end when the Islamic Revolution swept through Iran and transformed it into a repressive theocracy. The country's new ruler was Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, a fundamentalist cleric who loathed Western culture. After Pahlavi fled Iran in January 1979, Zahedi decamped to Switzerland. The embassy had its own mini-rebellion in which pro-Khomeini workers hacksawed a lock off Zahedi's office door and assumed control. They closed down the embassy compound the next year. It never reopened. With the countries in a state of war today, the shuttered Iranian Embassy stands as an eerie monument to a friendlier era. "The antagonistic relationship between the United States and Iran since 1979 is an anomaly in the long arc of history for these two countries," said John Ghazvinian, a historian and author of a study of US-Iranian relations. "The overwhelming majority of their history has been a story of mutual admiration." Founding Fathers Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson closely studied an ancient Greek account of Cyrus the Great, a Persian emperor they considered a model of enlightened leadership. American Christians later celebrated Persia as an enemy of the Ottoman Empire, which they associated with the persecution of their faith. By the mid-20th century, Iran supplied the United States with oil and became a key anti-Soviet ally. Many Iranians in turn saw the United States as a more benevolent version of European empires like Britain and Russia that had long manipulated their country. But over time, admiration turned to animosity. In 1953, the CIA covertly backed a coup against a democratically chosen prime minister. That made the United States appear as imperial and exploitative as any European power. Washington's subsequent decades of support for the shah suggested the United States was largely indifferent to his regime's corruption and repression so long as the oil flowed. Iranian revolutionaries overran the US Embassy in Tehran, the Iranian capital, in November 1979 and took 52 Americans hostage for what would be 444 days. In April 1980, the Carter administration formally severed relations with Iran, ordering the closure of its US facilities. Before locking up, Iranian Embassy workers poured more than 4,000 bottles of wine and other spirits down an outdoor fountain drain, according to a Washington Post account from the time.

CHARLES W. HARRITY/ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE

Iran's former ambassador Ardeshir Zahedi (left) talked with actress Barbra Streisand at a reception in D.C. in March 1975.

BOSTON GLOBE MEDIA
1 Exchange Place, Suite 201
Boston, MA 02109-2132
The Boston Globe (USPS061-420) is published Monday—Saturday. Periodicals postage-paid at Boston, MA. Postmaster, send address changes to:
Mail Subscription Department 300 Constitution Dr.
Taunton, MA 02783

YEARLY MAIL SUBSCRIPTION RATES FOR NEW ENGLAND
Seven days$1,612.00
Daily (6 Days)$1,060.80
Sunday only.....$520.00

For all other mail subscription rates and information, call 1-888-MYGLOBE or visit www.bostonglobe.com/subscribe
Free newspaper reading service for the visually impaired: Contact Perkins Braille & Talking Book Library at 800-852-3133 or www.perkinslibrary.org

NeedhamBankSM
What can we help you build?

Flex Checking Account

Free Checking and Free ATMs?

Check yeah.

Flex Checking has free ATMs and no monthly fees, plus you can add a high-yield GoalGetter Savings account.

 Open an account online or at any location, including our newest branch in the Prudential Center.
NeedhamBank.com/Flex

Free ATMs worldwide through full ATM reimbursement. Member FDIC |  Equal Housing Lender

Saudi plea for help a dilemma for Trump

Reluctant to open up another front in Iran war

By Helene Cooper, Eric Schmitt, Jonathan Swan, and Maggie Haberman
NEW YORK TIMES

For two weeks, the question of whether to yield to pleas from Saudi Arabia and order the US military to strike targets in Yemen controlled by the Iran-backed Houthis has bedeviled President Trump.

A decision to go forward could open another front in the war against Iran that Trump started but has been unable to end as it spreads economic shock around the globe.

The president had wavered for weeks over the Saudi appeals for help in fighting the Houthis, who took advantage of the instability in the Middle East and reignited their war with the kingdom this summer.

But things came to a head Thursday: Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, the kingdom's de facto leader and a major ally in the Iran war, called the president to implore him, again, to step in to help blunt the rapidly advancing group, administration officials said.

Trump had met with advisers just the day before and told them he did not favor strikes. But after speaking with the Saudi crown prince, he reversed himself and told the Pentagon to prepare for airstrikes against the Houthis.

But by midday Sunday, the president appeared to have reversed himself again. There would be no US airstrikes against the Houthis, at least not for the time being, according to administration officials. The officials spoke on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss military planning.

The White House press office declined to discuss Trump's deliberations for the record. A senior administration official would say only that "the US has a defense agreement with Saudi Arabia, and we will always defend our allies."

Most of the president's inner circle was either deeply skeptical or outright opposed to joining the Saudi fight against the Houthis, especially given the existing strains facing the US military in the war with Iran, according to a senior administration official.

Trump's decision to pull back from, or at least delay, striking Houthi targets came as commanders had approved target lists, troops were loading bombs onto US warplanes selected for the missions, and the wave of attacks was just about to begin, according to two people briefed on the operation.

In a telephone call with Fox News on Sunday morning, the president told reporter Trey Yingst that he was in "deciding mode" on what to do in the larger war with Iran. On the topic of the Houthis, the president said the United States was in constant communication with the group, mentioning that the Houthis had so far agreed not to fight the United States, Yingst reported.

The gyrations reflect the quandary in which the president now finds himself: He is correct when he says that the Houthis have steered clear of attacking US ships. But they have gone after Saudi Arabia, thus creating a dilemma for Trump.

Some US military officials have argued that the United States needs the kingdom's help with the war in Iran, and Saudi officials have shown they are willing to exercise what leverage they have in the absence of US cooperation.

For instance, in May, Saudi Arabia effectively halted the Trump administration's plan to use the US military to escort commercial oil tankers through the Strait of Hormuz by refusing the United States use of its airspace and American air bases in the country.

ICC braces itself for sanctions from US

Dutch officials work to keep court operating

By Molly Quell
ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE HAGUE — Dutch officials are preparing for the United States to impose a tough new round of sanctions on the International Criminal Court as it seeks to dismantle the global tribunal over what the Trump administration sees as overstepping its authority.

Officials in the court's host country, the Netherlands, have been notified that the sanctions are imminent and are looking at ways to help the tribunal keep operating, including paying staff, protecting witnesses, and maintaining the detention facility, diplomatic and government officials with knowledge of the briefings told the Associated Press. They spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak publicly.

Washington has already sanctioned more than a dozen current and former staff members, including half of the court's sitting judges, in what US Secretary of State Marco Rubio has described as a "sweeping campaign to dismantle the threat posed by the International Criminal Court."

The United States and Israel have strongly objected to the court's arrest warrants for top Israeli officials, including Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, over the war in Gaza. The United States also has opposed investigations into its military actions in Afghanistan.

Like Russia, China, India, and Israel, the United States is among countries that have never joined the panel, with Washington citing fears of politically motivated prosecutions of its military. The court currently has 125 member states.

The sanctions could prevent the court from accessing financial and IT services, and even paying its US employees. When the court's former chief prosecutor was sanctioned in 2025, he lost access to his Microsoft email, his bank accounts were frozen, and he was barred from entering the United States.

According to two sources familiar with the situation, US officials warned their Dutch counterparts that sanctions would be levied as early as Monday and encouraged the court's host state to withdraw from the institution.

Two US officials told the AP that more ICC sanctions may be coming, but stressed that the scale and scope of the penalties had not yet been finalized and that no announcement is expected this week.

The ICC was established in The Hague in 2002 as the court of last resort to prosecute individuals responsible for the world's most heinous atrocities: war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide, and the crime of aggression. It takes on cases when nations are unable or unwilling to prosecute crimes on their territory.

US officials did not immediately reply to a request for comment. "The Trump Administration has been clear: the International Criminal Court is a corrupt and fatally politicized supranational court that has maliciously abused its authority and exceeded its mandate," Secretary of State Marco Rubio said in a statement when announcing sanctions on the court president last month. "We will not tolerate its assault on state sovereignty."

The ICC has been preparing for the possibility of sanctions. Earlier this year, the court migrated off Microsoft products onto a German software provider, according to three ICC staff members who were not authorized to speak on the record. The tribunal also changed insurance and other financial providers to companies without a footprint in the United States, they said.

Dutch and court officials are hoping for a six-month grace period before the sanctions come into effect, arguing the institution needs time to sever itself from US companies, which could face huge financial penalties if found to be in violation.

US deportees face grave risks in Haiti, report says

Arrivals strain nation's already limited resources

By Dánica Coto
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JUAN — Human Rights Watch released a report on Monday detailing the hardships faced by hundreds of people deported by the United States to gang-ravaged Haiti.

The report is the first detailed look at the lives of deportees who have declined to speak at length with journalists because they fear for their safety. Gang violence is surging, and hunger and poverty are deepening.

The United States has deported more than 470 people to Haiti since July, including people who lost Temporary Protected Status, which had allowed them to live and work legally in the United States.

The main international airport in Port-au-Prince is considered too dangerous because of persistent gang violence, so deportation flights are landing in the northern city of Cap-Haitien. Mayor Michel Saint-Croix told Human Rights Watch that the city's population has tripled to more than 1 million in the past two years as it receives deportees and Haitians fleeing violence elsewhere in the country.

The deportees' arrival has strained already limited resources. Haitian migration officials said the US government has told them it planned to send as many as two deportation flights a week, each carrying about 200 people, according to the report.

Human Rights Watch said it interviewed 44 deportees, as well as Haitian and international officials.

Deportees said they went for hours without food or water and days without bathing or changing clothes while held at US immigration detention facilities. The interviewees said their belongings, including official documents and money, were not returned to them when they arrived in Haiti.

Haitians deported from the United States disembarked at the international airport in Cap-Haitien, Haiti, on Aug. 27.

US Immigration and Customs Enforcement and the US Department of Homeland Security did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

The rights group said it reviewed passenger manifests for two deportation flights in August. Neither contained information about the deportees' immigration status or the grounds for their removal.

Most of the 44 deportees interviewed said they had fled Haiti's worsening security and humanitarian crises and settled in US states. They found work in sectors such as construction, health care, and manufacturing.

Many said they were from Port-au-Prince or surrounding areas, where armed men control an estimated 70 percent of the capital. Others said they were from the Artibonite region, which is also under assault by violent gangs.

The deportees lived in the United States for anywhere from two to 14 years before being sent back to Haiti. Among them was a 38-year-old unidentified man who said he had lived in Florida since December 2019 and worked at the same hotel for more than six years.

His wife and 5-year-old son, who is a US citizen, remain in Florida, according to the report.

"I worked so that he could grow up without the fear, violence, and uncertainty that I had known in Haiti," the man was quoted as saying.

He and several other deportees said they had Temporary Protected Status, although the rights group noted it could not independently verify those claims.

A 47-year-old woman said she had lived in Miami with her husband, a US citizen, and was arrested when she attended an interview to apply for permanent residence.

"Once detained, most interviewees said authorities did not allow them to contact their lawyers or appear before an immigration judge, while many received little or no information about their pending asylum claims, the grounds for their detention, or how they could challenge their deportation," Human Rights Watch said.

Another deportee was a 24-year-old nursing assistant student who said she applied for asylum when fleeing Haiti in 2023 after gangs attacked her community.

At least 19,380 people were reported killed across Haiti between January 2023 and June 2026, according to the United Nations.

Hunger and poverty also are Challenges to identity drive Europe's far right

Most parties feel nostalgia for less diverse society

By Steven Erlanger
NEW YORK TIMES

BERLIN — The rise of a far-right party in Germany, the Alternative for Germany, represents a skewing of history, fueled by its own, sometimes imaginary vision of the past. It feeds, analysts say, on widespread alienation from a liberal, multicultural, united Germany committed to the memory of the Holocaust and Nazi crimes.

The AfD is now the most popular party nationwide, polls say, close to governing a German state for the first time, and did well again in two more state elections Sunday. It has benefited from economic and industrial decline and a sense of insecurity, which the party blames on the extensive migration of young Muslims in the last decade.

small eastern German state of Mecklenburg-West Pomerania and a good third in Berlin, while the Christian Democratic Union of Chancellor Friedrich Merz did poorly, in what he himself called "a disaster." The results will heighten talk of the party's replacing the unpopular chancellor before the end of his term.

The AfD has thrived on a key element that ties most populist parties together, especially those of the far right: nostalgia for a society and nation lost to time, even if they exist only in gilded memory or fantasy.

"We live in a world today of fragmentation and growing inequality, no longer with unifying themes or a unifying narrative," said Mohamed A. El-Erian, an economist at the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania. That sense of insecurity, analysts say, is driving many people to yearn for the narratives they do know, especially in the past, when life is remembered as simpler, family structures seemed more defined, and Western nations were largely Christian and less diverse.

AfD party leader Alice Weidel (center), with candidates Leif-Erik Holm and Kristin Brinker in Berlin on Monday.

Across Europe, far-right leaders have painted that idea of the past as preferable to the present, downplaying or dismissing inconvenient facts, such as Benito Mussolini's fascist regime in Italy, collaboration with the Nazis, Soviet occupation, or the inequalities of Margaret Thatcher's Britain.

France's far-right party, the National Rally, ahead in the polls for next year's crucial presidential election, has made French identity central to its ideology, which includes praising heroes like Joan of Arc and downplaying the Vichy regime.

Its emphasis on national values, assimilation and state preferences for citizens is largely shared by other far-right parties, including the Party of Freedom of Geert Wilders in the Netherlands, the Sweden Democrats, and the Reform U.K. party of Nigel Farage.

Behind tough positions on restricting immigration — and the deportation, or "remigration," of immigrants and criminals — these parties envision a threat to their culture and identity. They see national or even European culture as largely white and Christian, threatened by globalization, Islam, and the dilution of nationalism in institutions like the European Union.

The yearning for a proud identity is particularly strong in the former East Germany, which was essentially annexed in a peaceful takeover in 1989. As the country unified, West Germans arrived as a new elite to run businesses, or shut them down, and as much as a quarter of the population moved west, including many young women.

In a conversation in Weimar, in Thuringia, and where German democracy collapsed before the Nazis, Anna Wenske, 69, spoke of the East German identity as something lost.

"It was more German," she said. "Not little America, like the West."

Protections stripped from immigrant minors

►DEPORT
Continued from Page A1

refrained from deporting “unaccompanied minors” who are deemed by a state court to be at risk of further harm if sent home, instead offering humanitarian protection and time to apply for a green card.

Now, however, in an extraordinary departure from precedent, new immigration judges in Massachusetts and across the country have begun issuing removal orders against these children. The Department of Justice has said that reducing the backlog of cases in immigration court is a top priority.

Over the past month at the immigration court in Chelmsford, the Globe observed Judge Luciana Dubuc order the deportation of 17 children, including 7-year-old twin boys from Colombia, a 15-year-old girl from Honduras, and an 11-year-old girl from Haiti. The hearings usually lasted just a few minutes each.

The children, who often have pro bono or nonprofit lawyers representing them, have 30 days to appeal. But in the meantime, they can be picked up by ICE and sent to federal custody — likely held at an Office of Refugee Resettlement shelter if they’re alone, or booked into a family detention center if they’re with family.

In a decision issued earlier this year by the Board of Immigration Appeals, the highest administrative body for applying immigration laws, it ruled that immigration judges should not delay a juvenile’s deportation case even if they are petitioning for special humanitarian protection, a process that occurs on a separate timeline.

New immigration judges are also being coached to avoid rescheduling cases more generally, according to an Executive Office for Immigration Review internal training document from early September reviewed by the Globe.

“Some continuances are sought solely for the purpose of delay,” the training manual reads, adding that immigrants in the United States unlawfully “have a substantial incentive to prolong litigation so they may avoid deportation.”

Immigration policy experts say such policies are part of a massive push by the Trump administration to deport more immigrants, including children.

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

A rally last week at Boston City Hall Plaza sought to press immigration authorities for fairer hearings and due process.

In Massachusetts, immigration judges issued a record number of deportation orders in July — more than 2,200, according to data collected by the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse at Syracuse University. In June 2024, under the Biden administration, 249 removal orders were issued in Massachusetts immigration courts.

But advocates say using removal orders as a tool to fast-track children out of the country is dangerous and unfair. Many unaccompanied minors have endured gang violence, labor exploitation, abuse or neglect by their parents, sex trafficking, or extreme poverty, and may wind up back in those same circumstances or worse if they are deported.

“The consequences of this are dire,” said Diana Tafur, a senior adviser for the Children’s Legal Services team at the International Rescue Committee.

Lawyers have also reported an uptick in deportation orders against kids in Philadelphia and Chicago.

In a statement to the Globe, a spokesperson for the Department of Justice said that the Biden administration had “intentionally turned a blind eye to hundreds of thousands of unaccompanied alien children in need of care.”

“Reducing the immigration court backlog remains one of the highest priorities for this administration,” the spokesperson said. “The Justice Department is restoring integrity to our immigration system by hearing cases fairly, expeditiously, and uniformly, in accordance with the law.”

Protections for unaccompanied minors were established under the Immigration Act of 1990, which passed with broad bipartisan support. The law created a “special immigrant juvenile status” for children under 21 in need of humanitarian relief; eligibility was expanded in 2008 under the George W. Bush administration.

To be given that special status, a minor must be determined by a state court to have suffered abuse, neglect, or abandonment by a parent. US Citizenship and Immigration Services, the Department of Homeland Security office that handles green cards, offers a process for those minors to apply for permanent residency.

That process usually takes years, and in the meantime, the children’s immigration cases proceed in the immigration court system, which is under the Department of Justice. In the past, judges typically postponed their immigration court dates or closed their cases completely, attorneys said.

Now, though, judges are saying, “We are going to order you removed anyway,” Tafur said.

Children with special immigrant juvenile status can try to remain by applying for asylum. Indeed, the Globe witnessed Dubuc allow several children more time to file asylum applications.

But not all unaccompanied minors are good candidates for asylum, and lawyers fear being penalized if they are accused of submitting frivolous applications.

“We must stop the widespread abuse that is currently undermining our immigration system,” James Percival, the general counsel for the Department of Homeland Security, wrote in a letter sent to the American Immigration Lawyers Association last week.

“If you are unhappy about the current administration’s actions curbing asylum abuse at the southern border,” Percival wrote, “you must recognize that these measures are a necessary response to the broken rules and constant exploitation that you helped create and sustain.”

Some children don’t have lawyers to help them, a shortage that is likely to grow, leaving more children vulnerable to deportation. This summer, federal officials declined to renew a legal services contract that provided more than 25,000 unaccompanied children with federally funded representation in immigration court.

The Chelmsford court hears a children’s docket each Wednesday, in a windowless room on the third floor. Children show up for their hearings in person or appear on a screen remotely. Some are too small for their feet to touch the floor as they sit before the judge, too short to reach the microphone.

They come from across New England, usually accompanied by an attorney, a parent, or a guardian. Many miss school for the court date; not appearing could end in a deportation order.

At the end of August, a 16-year-old named Noé traveled more than an hour from Rhode Island to attend his hearing with his lawyer before Dubuc, a former ICE attorney who, like most of the judges in Chelmsford now, was appointed this year.

Noé is one of five children from a destitute family in Guatemala. He juggled work and school as a young boy, harvesting tomatoes and corn; his father, Francisco, left for the US five years ago to work in construction and send money. Last year, Noé and his brother, who was 13 at the time, decided they had to be with their dad; they made their way through Guatemala and Mexico on foot, by bus, and in the back seats of cars. They crossed the southern border, where they were detained. At last, in May, they were released to their father in Rhode Island. (The Globe is using nicknames for the boy and his father because they fear being targeted by the administration.)

This summer, a state court found that Noé had been abused, neglected, and abandoned by his mother, and his application for special juvenile migrant status was pending. He entered the 10th grade in Rhode Island.

But in early September, after a brief hearing before Dubuc, the judge told him she could not delay his case as his application for status played out. She ordered him deported.

Moments later, Noé called his father in tears, scared that ICE agents were lying in wait outside.

“They’re going to arrest me,” he told his father before making it home.

Francisco, who is also undocumented, said in an interview days later that Noé’s life has changed dramatically.

“We are scared to go out,” he said. “He goes to school in fear.”

Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio can be reached at giulia.mcdnr@globe.com. Follow her @giuliamcdnr.

Judge urged to hold ‘limited inquiry’ of holdout Clancy juror agreed to make the defense motion public, but has impounded a memorandum and exhibits that were attached to it.

►CLANCY
Continued from Page A1

The jury questionnaire would resolve questions that arose after the mistrial over whether the juror disclosed that he had an active civil restraining order against him and had previously been accused of domestic violence, though that charge was ultimately dismissed. Those issues could have factored into the jury selection process.

In the motion, Reddington urged the judge to examine the juror about “the truthfulness of the questionnaire” and his answers when questioned during jury selection; his assurance that he was following the law when each juror was questioned under oath the day before the mistrial was granted; and “the use of a mobile telephone or receipt of outside information during deliberations.”

Reddington wrote in the motion that the inquiry “will not touch on the substance of deliberations,” but may include questioning of another juror who complained during an interview with ABC News that the holdout was scrolling on his cellphone during deliberations.

The holdout juror is not named in court filings, but the Globe identified him last week as Michael Desronvil, 48, of Bridgewater, after his name and photograph first surfaced on social media.

Fellow jurors accused him of failing to follow the law related to reasonable doubt during deliberations, but in a statement released by a lawyer last week claiming to represent him, Desronvil insisted he had no doubt and believed Clancy was guilty of the slayings.

Separately on Monday, Reddington and another prominent defense attorney, Martin G. Weinberg, filed a motion to dismiss the murder charges against Clancy on double jeopardy grounds, arguing that she should not be subjected to another trial because 11 jurors were poised to find her not guilty by reason of insanity and the lone holdout juror was accused of refusing to follow the judge’s instructions regarding reasonable doubt.

Clancy, 36, admitted to strangling 5-year-old Cora, 3-year-old Dawson, and 8-month-old Callan in the basement of their Duxbury home on Jan. 24, 2023, but pleaded not guilty to three counts of first-degree murder based on insanity. She argued that she was suffering from postpartum psychosis and hallucinated a man’s voice telling her to kill herself and her children. She slashed her neck and wrists after killing the children, then jumped out a second-story window, leaving her paralyzed from the waist down.

Prosecutors allege the murders were premeditated by Clancy, who was suicidal and depressed, and knew what she was doing was wrong when she killed the children.

During jury selection, potential jurors were asked if they could follow the law and find Clancy not guilty by reason of insanity if prosecutors failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that she wasn’t suffering from mental illness and was capable of understanding the wrongfulness of her actions or following the law. Those who admitted they could not remain impartial and follow the law were excused.

Then, the jury of nine wom-

GREG DERR/THE PATRIOT LEDGER VIA ASSOCIATED PRESS/POOL

Lindsay Clancy watched jurors enter the courtroom during her murder trial earlier this month in Plymouth.

en and three men, who heard five weeks of testimony, sent four notes to Sullivan during deliberations, saying they were unable to reach a unanimous verdict. One note indicated they were 11-1 in favor of acquitting Clancy based on insanity, but one juror wouldn’t follow the law about reasonable doubt, despite expressing doubt about her guilt. The identity of Desronvil only became public after.

Clancy’s attorney, Redding-ton, urged the judge to remove the juror and replace him with an alternate, or delve deeper into allegations that he wasn’t following the law. Sullivan denied the request, ruling it was improper to interfere with jury deliberations. And a single justice of the state’s highest court denied an emergency appeal by Reddington to intervene.

Sullivan declared a mistrial Sept. 4 after jurors deliberated for about 39 hours over seven days.

The judge scheduled the Sept. 29 hearing to discuss setting a new trial date, though Plymouth District Attorney Timothy Cruz has yet to announce whether he will retry Clancy on three counts of first-degree murder.

The defense motion was described as “very unusual” and “a fishing expedition” by Daniel F. Conley, an attorney at Mintz in Boston and former Suffolk district attorney.

Even if the juror was scrolling on his cellphone when he was supposed to be deliberating, or failed to disclose his prior history with the court, it’s unlikely to lead to a dismissal of the charges against Clancy, Conley said.

“This seems like an exercise in futility,” Conley said. “I don’t think it’s going to yield any evidence which would allow Judge Sullivan to reverse himself or lead an appellate court to say Lindsay Clancy should not be retried.”

Shortly after the mistrial, Desronvil’s personal legal issues surfaced, raising questions about the jury selection process.

Court documents first reported by NBC10 Boston, which did not identify Desronvil by name, reveal that when he was seated on Clancy’s jury on July 22, he was subject to a restraining order requiring him to stay away from his teenage nephew following an alleged assault a year earlier.

In September 2021, Desronvil was charged with domestic assault and battery on his then-wife, but that charge was later dismissed. Neither a domestic violence charge nor a civil restraining order would automatically disqualify someone from serving on a jury. However, potential jurors are required to answer questions related to any criminal history and court orders.

In the pending motion, Reddington urged the judge to order the holdout juror to deliver his cellphone to “a neutral examiner designated by the court” to analyze his use of the device during the hours the jury was deliberating over seven days.

Efforts to reach Desronvil have been unsuccessful.

A lawyer who said he represents Desronvil released a statement on his behalf last week asserting the juror “didn’t have any doubts” prosecutors had proved Clancy was criminally responsible for the killings of her children.

The attorney, Edward Andrew Paltzik, one of six lawyers representing President Trump in his pending federal defamation suit against The New York Times in Florida, posted the statement to the social media platform X.

“I didn’t have any doubts,” Desronvil said in the statement, disputing claims made by fellow jurors in a note to the judge before the mistrial and in interviews afterward.

“As I tried to explain different possible theories during deliberation, I kept getting cut off as if I had doubts based on the evidence presented,” Desronvil said. “Based on all the physical evidence, key witnesses, and what the prosecution presented, I thought it was enough proof that she (Clancy) knew exactly what she was doing and planned.”

Shelley Murphy can be reached at shelley.murphy@globe.com. Follow her @shelleymurph. Travis Andersen can be reached at travis.andersen@globe.com.

INBOX

Kraft put his foot down over Macklemore. The thud reverberated.

Rapper hasn’t fully reckoned with the costume he wore in 2014

Re “Macklemore was right. Robert Kraft was wrong” (Ideas, Sept. 20): Normally I would be in complete agreement with Abdallah Fayyad. I oppose the actions of the Israeli government any way I can. I disagree with the conflation of anti-semitism with opposition to the Israeli government. Large numbers of American Jews, in fact, feel the same way.

The problem I have with Macklemore is the costume he wore onstage in 2014. Media covering the controversy surrounding Robert Kraft’s ban of the rapper from Ed Sheeran’s scheduled stop at Gillette Stadium have characterized the costume as resembling a Jewish caricature. The costume clearly is a Jewish caricature. It’s not antizionist; it’s straight-up, old-fashioned antisemitism.

LINDSEY WASSON/THE SEATTLE TIMES

Macklemore performed in costume in Seattle in 2014.

We all make mistakes. We all sometimes make comments that can feel offensive when we don’t mean them to be. And yes, Macklemore did apologize at the time, saying that he could see how the costume could be perceived but did not intend to offend anyone.

However, it is simply not believable that the rapper did not know — before he wore the costume onstage — that it was an insult to Jews. If he did not know, then it suggests that he is profoundly ignorant of the Jewish experience.

If he is to have any credibility with a wider audience as a supporter of Palestinian rights, he needs to own up to this. Racism and other forms of hatred often operate below the conscious level. Maybe Macklemore genuinely believes he is not antisemitic. Maybe he needs to give that some thought.

Many progressives and supporters of the Palestinian cause have chosen to ignore the 2014 incident. That only reinforces the belief of some people that support for the Palestinian people and opposition to the Israeli government are the same as antisemitism. To move forward, Macklemore and those who defend him need to really address that.

BARRY KAYE
Belmont

‘Free Palestine’ nuanced — conditions in Gaza and the West Bank, less so

I appreciated, and learned a lot from, the Sept. 18 Boston-Globe.com article on how certain contexts can define the phrase “Free Palestine” differently for different audiences (“The phrase ‘Free Palestine’ sparked the Ed Sheeran tour controversy. Why?”). I did not learn as much as I wanted to about the existential peril Palestinians face in Gaza and the West Bank and how to stop the carnage.

VIVIAN TSENG
Malden

This decades-long Pats fan is gravely disappointed in Kraft

Some of my fondest memories are attending Boston Patriots games with my father at Boston College in 1969 and watching the great Johnny Unitas come off the bench for the Baltimore Colts against the Pats at Harvard Stadium in 1970.

I have always loved the Pats, and their games have been a weekly respite from the real world. But not anymore, not after reading “Rapper says Kraft got him dropped from Sheeran tour” (Living/Arts, Sept. 15).

I note the reporters’ wording — Macklemore was dropped over his “pro-Palestinian remarks,” not anti-Israeli remarks. I wish Kraft had just acknowledged this before blackballing Macklemore for saying, “Free Palestine,” at a recent concert. Since the horrible Hamas attack on Israel on Oct. 7, 2023 — and it was truly horrible — more than 70,000 Palestinians have been killed.

Meanwhile, last week Kraft’s wife, Dr. Dana Blumberg, a board member for the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts who has been part of the push to get Donald Trump’s name on the building, reportedly voted to close the center unless Trump gets his way.

Sunday was my first week not watching my Patriots in more than 60 years.

JEREMIAH CRONIN Milton

BARRY CHIN/GLOBE STAFF

New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft was at Gillette Stadium in Foxborough Aug. 13 as the team hosted the Indianapolis Colts in a preseason game.

Billionaire’s alliance against hate should turn its attention to Trump

Re “Kraft’s ‘solemn ambition’ meets pushback: Blowback over Macklemore ban comes amid commitment to fight anti-semitism” (Page A1, Sept. 18): It’s the height of hypocrisy for Robert Kraft to head an “alliance against hate” while remaining a steadfast and outspoken supporter of President Trump.

Trump’s everyday rhetoric is so full of hatred that in March a report by the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination specifically condemned the president’s use of “racist hate speech,” arguing it could foster “intolerance and may incite racial discrimination [and] hate crimes.”

RICH FEINBERG
Boston

Opinion

BOSTONGLOBE.COM/OPINION

ENDORSEMENT

The Globe endorses yes on Question 1

Massachusetts has long been a national outlier in offering a blanket exemption from the state’s Public Records Law to the governor’s office and the Legislature, putting wide swaths of information crucial to an informed citizenry beyond their reach.

Each governor, each leader of the Massachusetts House and Senate has set his or her own rules on what gets disclosed to the public. Some have been more expansive than others in allowing a bit of daylight in.

But there’s a good reason Massachusetts was the not-so-proud recipient of the Black Hole Award from the Society of Professional Journalists this year. The “annual dishonor,” as the group described it, was awarded for “deficiencies in the state’s public records law, including broad exemptions, weak enforcement mechanisms, and persistent delays that limit access to government information.”

Massachusetts voters have a chance to remedy at least part of that sorry situation this year by voting for Question 1 on the state ballot to expand the Public Records Law to cover the Office of the Governor and the Massachusetts Legislature.

“This will open up the doors of the State House to everyone, not just the powerful and the privileged on Beacon Hill,” State Auditor Diana DiZoglio told the editorial board.

FRANKBOSTON/ADOBE

The auditor, who led the fight two years ago for a ballot question to subject the Legislature to a state audit — a measure passed by 72 percent of voters — sees this as the second phase of that fight for transparency.

“Question 1 will make these records accessible to every single resident of this state,” she added. “That’s what’s needed to bring transparency to Beacon Hill.”

The legislation spelled out in the ballot question is relatively simple, adding the governor’s office and the Legislature to the state’s existing Public Records Law, which already covers every city and town official and every state agency and constitutional office (other than the governor). In fact, laws governing the disclosure of public records in this state date back to 1851, according to the Secretary of State’s office, which plays a vital role in their administration.

Existing law is already replete with exemptions that cover a host of private information that can be redacted from otherwise public documents and outlines what communications are inherently private.

But to head off any possible objection to the ballot question its drafters have added a few more specifics related to the Legislature. Communications between lawmakers and their constituents dealing with “requests for assistance in obtaining government-provided benefits or services” would remain off limits to public searches, as would communicader the Public Records Law.

Last June, the House passed a bill to put the governor’s office under the law, but sets up an alternative procedure for the Legislature that doesn’t come close to full transparency. In fact, it actually enumerates a list of 17 specific items, nearly all of which are already available to the public, including such mundane items as the House legislative calendar and roll call votes.

The Senate passed its own version last July, marginally better than the House bill, but still far short of real transparency.

Both bills are now in conference committee — and remain alive until the end of the calendar year. Should Question 1 pass on Nov. 3, the Legislature has within its grasp the means to almost immediately overturn the wisdom of the voters by passing those bills — a scary and most undemocratic possibility.

Today, Massachusetts remains one of only four states in the nation in which the Legislature is totally exempt from any public records law — the others being Oklahoma, Oregon, and Wyoming. It’s not the kind of club a state with a reputation for being “the state of firsts” should want to be a member of.

The Globe editorial board enthusiastically endorses a yes vote on Question 1. Hopefully voters will give it their resounding approval, too — so resounding that lawmakers will get the message that transparency isn’t something they can avoid forever.

The Boston Globe

Founded 1872

JOHN W. HENRY
Publisher

LINDA PIZZUTI HENRY
Chief Executive Officer

BRIAN McGRORY
Editor

JAMES DAO
Editorial Page Editor

DHIRAJ NAYAR
President

CRISTINA SILVA
Managing Editor, Operations & Standards

CYNTHIA NEEDHAM
Managing Editor, News

JASON TUOHEY
Managing Editor, Digital Strategy

DEPUTY MANAGING EDITORS

Marjorie Pritchard Op-Ed
Anica Butler Storytelling
David Scharfenberg Ideas
Jeneé Osterheldt Culture, Talent, & Development
Heather Ciras Audience Engagement & Digital Strategy
Francis Storrs Special Projects & Enterprise
Tim Logan Local News

SENIOR ASSISTANT MANAGING EDITORS

Mary Creane Production
Alan Wirzbicki Editorial Page
Andrew Caffrey News & Enterprise
Chris Morris Living/Arts
Greg Huang Storytelling
Victoria McGrane Digital Platforms

SPOTLIGHT EDITOR

Patricia Wen

BUSINESS MANAGEMENT

Dan Krockmalnic Chief Operating Officer & General Counsel
Angus Macaulay
Michelle Micone Chief Commercial Officer
Anthony Bonfiglio Chief Technology Officer
Tom Brown
Josh Russell VP, Print Operations
Michelle Micone Chief Marketing & Strategic Initiatives Officer
Rodrigo Tajonar Chief People Officer
Matt Karolian VP, Platforms & AI
Chris Zeien Chief Financial Officer

Charles H. Taylor Founder & Publisher 1873-1921
William O. Taylor Publisher 1921-1955
Wm. Davis Taylor Publisher 1955-1977
William O. Taylor Publisher 1978-1997
Benjamin B. Taylor Publisher 1997-1999

Richard H. Gilman Publisher 1999-2006
P. Steven Ainsley Publisher 2006-2009
Christopher M. Mayer Publisher 2009-2014
Laurence L. Winship Editor 1955-1965
Thomas Winship Editor 1965-1984

FINN GOMEZ/GETTY

Television booths sat empty on the White House grounds on Sept. 21.

Trump doesn’t get to ban the press

By Jill Abramson

Jill Abramson, a former executive editor of The New York Times, teaches journalism at Northeastern University and is a contributing Globe Opinion writer.

The North Lawn driveway of the White House is where television correspondents often film their live shots. But some of the broadcast booths that line “Pebble Beach,” as it’s known, were empty over the weekend because President Trump had banned them from the White House.

Correspondents from CNN, MS NOW, and Politico lost their press credentials on orders from the president, opening a new front in his dangerous war on the press. Although he cited no particular stories for criticism, Trump accused them on Truth Social of spreading “fake news,” a Trump phrase that’s grown so shopworn that it’s almost meaningless. At this point, any news story that is critical seems to fit the president’s warped definition of fake. The outlets filed a lawsuit against Trump Monday to restore reporter access. In a show of solidarity, the other news networks on Monday also withdrew from White House pool duty.

This is not the first time Trump has banished reporters from the White House, though these restrictions violate the First Amendment and have been fought in court. During Trump’s first term, former CNN correspondent Jim Acosta challenged the president at a press conference; his credentials were later pulled. (After CNN sued they were restored). When the Associated Press rightly refused to refer to the Gulf of Mexico as the Gulf of America, AP reporters were banned from the press pool, the Oval Office, and Air Force One. A federal judge ruled that the White House was violating the First Amendment, but the case is still being litigated.

Many news organizations have denounced the latest bans. Even Fox News weighed in. Jacqui Heinrich, a Fox News anchor and the president of the White House Correspondents’ Association, said, “This is about more than the rights of journalists. It is about the right of the American people to receive a full and independent account of the activities, policies and decisions of whoever occupies the nation’s highest office.”

Trump threatened to extend his ban to other news organizations. “It’s sick,” he ranted, “I mean, there’s something wrong with a country that can allow people to write purposely negative stories,” he said. “Now, if they want to write them, that’s fine. But I don’t have to let them into my — into the people’s house.”

Trump doesn’t get that the First Amendment is first for a reason. The Founders recognized the importance of a free press to hold those in power accountable. They feared just the kind of arrogant, absolute ruler that Trump has turned out to be. No administration, even Richard Nixon’s with its notorious Enemies List, has been as hostile to a free press as this one.

To curry favor with Trump, the rest of his administration has eagerly taken up his anti-press cudgel. Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth took away the workspaces used by the media and forced reporters to work in a building outside the Pentagon. They must be accompanied by military officials when they interview Pentagon employees inside. These restraints are also still being fought in court. The Pentagon also forced out the publisher and editor of Stars and Stripes, which dared to publish reliable news about the military.

FBI Director Kash Patel has been equally retaliatory. As a White House aide in 2019, he sued Politico, The New York Times, and CNN over his portrayal in Ukraine coverage. More recently, he sued The Atlantic for allegedly libeling him in a story about his drinking.

News organizations, some hard pressed financially, are being forced to waste money defending their clear First Amendment rights. Trump himself has intimated that the nuisance factor and cost burdens alone make his anti-press campaign worthwhile, even if they don’t hold up legally. The shameful, multimillion-dollar settlements that ABC and CBS previously paid him only egged him on.

Our country was built on checks and balances. With a pliant Congress and Supreme Court, the checks are disappearing, leaving the Fourth Estate as our bulwark against abusive power. This is why it is so urgent to support the press.

Without a free press, it’s doubtful the nation would know about the vast corruption of Trump, his family, and his administration. The president keeps adding billions to his net worth while he is in office, accompanied by a feeding frenzy for money among those in his inner circle. We learned just last week, through an investigation by ProPublica, that a Russian oligarch paid for Donald Trump Jr.’s posh wedding in the Bahamas in May. Since Trump took office, barely a week has gone by without some kind of corrupt private dealing being revealed by investigative reporters.

On MS NOW, correspondent Peter Alexander put it well, saying, “President Trump can’t stop reporters from reporting. And he cannot ban the facts.”

The Clancy mistrial and the defense of the holdout juror

By Pierre H. Bergeron and Shannon Price

Pierre H. Bergeron is a retired Ohio appellate judge and professor at Centre College. Shannon Price is a professor at the Rosenberg College of Law at the University of Kentucky.

Public outrage surrounding the mistrial in the Lindsay Clancy case is understandable. After 21 days of testimony and 7 days of deliberations, the tragedy still lacks closure. Clancy was on trial for the 2023 murder of her three young children.

In the fallout of the explosive mistrial, news reports on the lone holdout juror fixated on unsavory personal details. Past allegations of domestic violence came to light. Fellow jurors lambasted the holdout’s purported refusal to base his opinion on specific evidence (which he now disputes), recalling their own efforts to have him dismissed from jury service. After the holdout’s name was revealed on X, he and his family were forced into hiding.

A juror’s dissent from the opinions of their colleagues cannot be at the cost of their safety and privacy.

We weren’t in the deliberation room with the Clancy jury. We cast no judgment on whether this particular holdout juror made the right call. But amid the firestorm of toxicity and polarizing rhetoric, three points deserve emphasizing — points we expand on further in our forthcoming book, “The Jury’s Out: The Fight to Save the American Legal System.”

First, vilification of holdout jurors is nothing new. It is as old as the country’s constitutional foundation.

Second, it is precisely the power of the holdout juror that makes America’s jury system such an effective guard against governmental abuse. Holdouts are the greatest check on the government’s ability to imprison individuals, a check dearly won over centuries of advocacy, yet teetering on the brink of extinction today.

Third, the holdout juror — not as any one individual, but as a pillar and an archetype of American justice — deserves defending. Even in the most frustrating of cases.

Consider the history of jury unanimity. In 1898, the state of Louisiana convened a constitutional convention for the express purpose of establishing “the supremacy of the white race.” A key item on this deplorable agenda was the elimination of jury unanimity and holdout jurors by allowing 10-2 verdicts. By stripping holdout jurors of their power to block verdicts, Louisiana ensured that individual jurors (often, those of color) could be silenced. The state excused its conduct with arguments that should sound familiar today, claiming that holdout jurors were no more than obstructionist fools refusing to follow the law.

Civil rights activists spent decades fighting back against jury non-unanimity. It wasn’t until 2020 that the Supreme Court finally declared the practice unconstitutional, with advocates for unanimity emphasizing the disproportionate number of defendants of color convicted by non-unanimous juries. The case represented a victory for the collective voice of the jury by ensuring that all views must be considered.

Of course, sometimes a holdout juror is wrong — at least in the eyes of society or a particular law. Jurors, like the rest of us, are imperfect. They can make mistakes or misunderstand the legal instructions they receive. But it’s important to remember that judges, too, make mistakes, which is the entire reason that we have an appellate court system.

Today, only about 1 percent of cases nationwide reach the jury. And yet local courts often struggle to empanel juries who are truly representative of our communities. Jury service can be burdensome and difficult. Courts today are making some progress in reducing financial and familial barriers to service — but those efforts will be in vain if prospective jurors are too fearful to report for duty.

Jury service should not be a dangerous endeavor. A juror’s dissent from the opinions of their colleagues cannot be at the cost of their safety and privacy. Judges and jurors must make difficult, and sometimes controversial, decisions. We can’t have them looking over their shoulders when considering how to decide a case.

Consider the democratic value of the jury trial process — even when a mistrial results. If Clancy’s defense team had not taken the case to the jury, the case could not have sparked invaluable discussions on postpartum care, gender equity, and mental health. And the 11-1 vote for acquittal sent a stark message to the prosecution, with an impact that will radiate beyond Clancy to other cases involving similar issues and affect the decision-making calculus of prosecutors across the nation.

We tend to imagine jurors as faceless individuals casting lots in a back room somewhere. But they are real people with real struggles in difficult cases. Jury service can test the fortitude of anyone, particularly when it pits a juror’s view of morality against legal requirements. The struggle to reach a unanimous decision is, by design, often a challenging task.

But in a moment when opportunities for collective decision-making are sparse, we — as a society — need this exercise. Empirical research supports the notion that jurors who struggle with cases become more engaged in civic initiatives after their service. The crucible they face helps restore their faith in our institutions, something that we are in short supply of today.

Our justice system needs the jury. And the jury needs the power of the holdout.

JOAN VENNOCHI

Barney Frank’s final warning for the left

During Barney Frank’s funeral in June, Marty Meehan, president of the University of Massachusetts system and a former congressman, asked how many people in attendance had ever been yelled at by Frank. As reported by WBUR, at least half the room raised their hands.

Frank, a longtime congressman from Massachusetts, yelled at me, too, just like he yelled at just about every journalist who wrote about him. Reading Frank’s posthumous book — “The Hard Path to Unity: Why We Must Reform the Left to Rescue Democracy” — allowed me to envision leftist zealots yelling at him, with the full understanding that he would relish yelling right back.

The two-word opening of Frank’s book — “Mea culpa” — is quickly followed by a striking renunciation of the Bernie Sanders/Elizabeth Warren school of progressive politics that Frank came to represent in a less-absolute way. As he wrote: “This book is an effort to undo the damage inflicted by a tragic historical irony. Well-intentioned but deeply flawed choices made by those most deeply committed to liberal values — my fellow and sister members of the democratic left — are largely responsible for the political strength that xenophobic populism has come to enjoy in the developed world.”

In this view from the grave, the political left is to blame for the rise of MAGA and the political right, and unless the left changes its uncompromising ways, it will continue to lose to the right. At this moment in time, is he correct? The Michigan Senate race, featuring democratic socialist Abdul El-Sayed, will be one high-profile test of the party’s ideological position. Then, the fight for party identity will continue during the Democratic primaries for the 2028 presidential election.

Frank’s own political history on a range of social and economic issue makes his posthumous thinking especially noteworthy.

Over 111 pages, Frank doesn’t mince words about the issues that he believed tipped the balance away from liberalism as a winning platform. They include immigration, or as he describes it, “essentially allowing anyone who could physically reach a desired location a de facto safe haven”; the high price consumers must pay for climate change policies like the Green New Deal; the folly of moving from police reform to “defunding the police”; and the embrace of transgender rights, which he describes as “the leap from recognition of an individual’s right to transition from the gender of their birth to the denial that male and female are valid categories.”

In what is also music to any centrist’s ears, Frank writes that “insisting on pursuing maximum solutions, immediately, regardless of public opposition, gives good intentions a bad name. Such an all-or-nothing approach not only sinks the prospects for passing the most controversial policies, but also diminishes support for the cause itself.” But he also blasts more moderate Democrats for being cowed by the left, noting that the “mainstream’s aversion to left-on-left debate has helped to convince many voters that keeping us out of power is their only defense against Medicare for All, the Green New Deal, Defunding the Police, Open Borders, and the rule of the pronoun police.”

Frank also stands strongly against the strict box-checking that requires Democrats to embrace absolute progressive positions, or be ostracized.

Frank’s own political history on a range of social and economic issue makes his posthumous thinking especially noteworthy.

He was the first member of the House to come out as gay, and the first in Congress to marry a same-sex partner. He championed legislation that expanded the federal definition of hate crimes to include acts based on gender, sexual orientation, and disability and co-authored groundbreaking regulation of the banking industry after the 2008 financial crisis.

As he writes, “having been clearly on the Left during my career, I believe I am less vulnerable than most to charges that I am using strategic arguments as a cover for substantive opposition. And being retired, I am immune to the accusation that I am driven by a need for votes or campaign funds.”

Geoff Browning, who worked with Frank for 15 years as a research assistant and was editorial assistant on the book, said that Frank appreciated that former House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, “always knew where the votes were and where they weren’t,” and his goal was to get to a place where Democrats could win that vote.

“What it really comes down to, is when you are campaigning for or advocating for ideas, how does that translate to an ability to get things done,” Browning told me in an interview. “His frustration was that some tactics are not effective and may be self-defeating. He wanted to provoke a conversation about what is required to win. That’s what this book does.”

Browning said that Frank yelled at him, too. “By the end of his life, I was very comfortable sparring with him and I will miss that,” he said. Their arguments “made my thinking stronger and clearer,” said Browning.

Democrats need more of that kind of arguing. Frank isn’t here to lead it, but his book is a good starting point.

Joan Vennoch is a Globe columnist. She can be reached at joan.vennoch@globe.com. Follow her @joan_vennoch.

Vt. man is found guilty of attempted murder

►SHOOTINGS
Continued from Page A1

neighborhood here, joking with one another in a mixture of Arabic and English. Two were wearing black-and-white keffiyehs, traditional Palestinian scarves.

A slender white man stepped off the porch of a nearby home and opened fire, without saying a word, the victims said in harrowing testimony last week.

“I first heard a gunshot and then two more gunshots, and then I fell to the ground,” Awartani said.

A bullet ricocheted off his scapula and paralyzed him from the chest down. His friends were wounded in the attack but recovered.

Awartani, who graduated from Brown University in May, watched the trial unfold from a wheelchair in the front row of Chittenden Superior Court.

After the verdict was read, he and Aliahmad embraced family members and prosecutors. Awartani’s mother, Elizabeth Price, squeezed his shoulders.

In an interview with the Globe, Awartani said he’d been surprised and heartened that it took the jury just two hours to reach its verdict. He said he felt vindicated by the result.

“I knew why I was targeted,” Awartani said. “It was obviously because of who I am and my heritage.”

Eaton will be sentenced at a later date. Each count carries a potential life sentence.

His attorneys never contested that he had pulled the trigger. And in the opening days of the trial, prosecutors laid out a methodical case tying him to the gun and ammunition they said were used in the shooting. Cellular records placed him near the scene, outside his apartment.

A key question was whether he was suffering from a mental defect or disease at the time and, consequently, could not tell right from wrong — Vermont’s standard for an insanity defense.

The trial turned on the testimony of two forensic psychologists who provided opposite answers to that question.

Dr. Fabian Saleh, of the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine, testified for the defense that Eaton believed he was acting on the orders of intelligence agencies, deceased relatives, and a higher power — each of which Eaton believed were communicating with him via FM radio and Bluetooth.

“In my opinion, he did suffer from a mental disease,” Saleh said. “And that he, as a result of that mental disease, lacked adequate ability to appreciate the criminality of his conduct.”

But Dr. Jhilam Biswas, of Brigham and Women’s Hospital, testified for the prosecution that in three decades of mental health treatment, Eaton had never been diagnosed with a serious psychological disorder. Rather, Biswas said, he met the criteria for narcissistic personality disorder.

Eaton had been fired from his job weeks earlier, Biswas said, leaving him “extraordinarily stressed.” He had also been using alcohol and cannabis — and voraciously consuming media coverage of the Israel-Hamas war. That “constellation of factors” led him to fire on the young men, she said, not an organic disease of the brain that would meet the bar for an insanity defense.

PAUL HEINTZ/GLOBE STAFF VIA ASSOCIATED PRESS/POOL

The trial of Jason Eaton turned on the testimony of two forensic psychologists in regards to the insanity defense.

Biswas had recently testified in the trial of Lindsay Clancy, the Massachusetts mother charged with killing her three children. Biswas had evaluated Clancy two days after the killings.

Like Eaton, Clancy also pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, though that case ended in mistrial.

Eaton’s attorneys and the prosecution each shared with the jury different clips of the same recording to bolster their respective cases: a conversation Eaton had with his lawyers five days after the shooting.

The defense focused on segments of the recording in which their client described hearing the Central Intelligence Agency, Israeli intelligence, and others instructing him to conduct “an overwatch” of a Jewish household across the street before ultimately instructing him to shoot three men passing by.

“Here’s the good news. I’ll be amazed if they could prove this is a hate crime,” Eaton says in the recording, laughing. “I may have invented the love crime.”

Prosecutors read clips from the recording in which he blamed Awartani’s grandmother for failing to warn neighbors that the three students were “gonna dress up like terrorists.”

Eaton said he wished the grandmother had told them, “Maybe now’s not a great time to wear that thing on your head,” referring to the keffiyehs.

Eaton had long been an ob-

‘After three years of sorrow, loss, and struggle, our families finally feel relief.’

ELIZABETH PRICE, mother of Hisham Awartani, who was left paralyzed from the attack

stacle to his own defense. In the years before his case went to trial, he had twice tried to fire his attorneys and filed repeated motions asking to move the case to federal court, so that he could raise a “public authority defense” resting on his assertions that he’d been instructed to act by the CIA.

He tried again to fire his attorneys on Thursday, saying they had ineffectively represented him. Judge John Pacht rejected the request.

Eaton frequently sought to engage with the judge, though only when the jury was absent. In one exchange, Pacht said the jury should not be able to consider a manslaughter charge because that applies only to acts committed in the heat of passion or provocation.

“If Anne Frank killed Adolf Hitler, would that be a provocation?” Eaton asked. “If the people on Flight 93 in Shanksville, Pennsylvania, murdered their fellow passengers, is that a passion?”

One of his attorneys, Margaret Jansch, tried to silence him. “Jason, please, you’re not helping yourself,” she said.

After the verdict was read, Price, Awartani’s mother, read a statement on behalf of all three families.

“After three years of sorrow, loss, and struggle, our families finally feel relief,” she said. “The verdict cannot undo what happened or erase the trauma our families still carry, but it affirms something fundamental. Jason Eaton is responsible for what he did.”

Awartani, who plans to return to the West Bank for a year before pursuing a graduate degree in archeology, said in an interview it had been difficult to sit through so much testimony focused on Eaton’s mental health — and to hear the recordings made following the shooting.

He also expressed frustration that Eaton did not face hate-crime charges.

“But just because something’s not legally charged as a hate crime doesn’t change the fact that it was an act of hate,” he said.

As for his physical recovery, Awartani said: “It’s a long process and, you know, I hope to work hard. We’ll see what happens.”

Paul Heintz can be reached at paul.heintz@globe.com. Follow him on X @paulheintz.

The saga of off-the-leash, on-the-lam Moose continues in Vt.

►DOG
Continued from Page A1

impounded and then euthanized. It also barred Wheeler and her mother, Carol, from registering a dog in Burlington again, citing Wheeler’s “consistent and long-standing disregard for orders of this Committee.”

But whether she will turn over Moose, whose whereabouts remain unknown, is another question.

Wheeler has made abundantly clear she does not feel bound by the city’s orders.

“Moose is not in the city of Burlington. He has not been for some time, nor am I,” she told the Animal Control Committee at a hearing in August, appearing remotely from an unspecified location. “This committee has no jurisdiction over Moose or me. ... Your jurisdiction goes as far as the city limits, as I understand it.”

Whether that’s the case is not entirely clear, according to veteran Burlington lawyer John Franco, who previously served as assistant city attorney. The city has issued a binding administrative order, which Wheeler must follow or appeal in court, he said, but enforcing it might be challenging.

“I mean, how are they gonna get the dog?” Franco said. “Are they gonna send the Burlington police up to wherever the [expletive] she lives?”

At the August Animal Control Committee hearing, Wheeler said she was “transient” at the time and that her new residence would not be ready for a few weeks. Her sister, Deborah Lessor, said at the same hearing that Moose stayed with her in North Hero, Vt., three days a week. Asked where the dog lived the rest of the time, Lessor said, “You’ll have to address that with somebody else.”

In Monday’s order, the committee said Wheeler had made “various representations regarding Moose’s whereabouts,” including that he’s kept at times by a friend in Colchester, Vt., at a kennel in Milton, Vt., and with a dog trainer in New Hampshire. Wheeler obtained a license for Moose in North Hero in August. Still, the committee maintained it retained jurisdiction over the animal because of his frequent alleged appearances in the city, “regardless of where Moose is kept a majority of the time.”

During a tour of Moose’s haunts earlier this month, the Globe could find neither hide nor hair of him.

Nobody answered the door — or barked — at the home Diane and Carol Wheeler share on Roseade Parkway in Burlington. At Lessor’s house in North Hero, on the waterfront in the Champlain islands, a woman answered the door but declined to identify herself or answer questions about Moose.

Diane Wheeler, a former deputy state’s attorney, insists her dog, Moose, has only bitten in self-defense.

One North Hero neighbor, Kevin Holcomb, said he was aware of the Moose saga — like many Vermonters who follow the news — but did not realize the state’s most notorious dog spent part of his time right next door.

In 2023, soon after Wheeler adopted Moose, he attacked dogs in her Burlington neighborhood at least three times, injuring two of them and the owner of one, according to court and police reports. Neighbors filed a complaint with the Animal Control Committee, which in March 2024 revoked Wheeler’s dog license and ordered Moose rehomed.

While Wheeler appealed the order to state court, the incidents continued: Moose jumped on a neighborhood child and then, while being walked in a nearby park by Wheeler’s mother, broke free and charged a leashed dog. Its owner suffered multiple puncture wounds to his hand while breaking up the scuffle, an episode that drew press coverage and prompted public outcry.

The court ordered Moose impounded in September 2024, but Wheeler continued to resist.

Emails recently obtained by the Globe show Burlington’s police chief at the time, Jon Murad, implored Wheeler’s boss, Franklin County State’s Attorney Bram Kranichfeld, to persuade her to surrender Moose, saying she and her mother had “demonstrated an unwillingness to yield to authority.” A judge threatened to hold Wheeler in contempt — and even jail her. Police ultimately seized the dog.

After Moose completed a retraining program, the Animal Control Committee in April 2025 ordered him rehomed with Lessor, who was then living in Burlington. The committee said he could never again be registered to Wheeler, nor set paw on Roseade Parkway, and must be “securely restrained by a capable handler” whenever he left the Lessor property.

The problems persisted.

Moose bit an unnamed relative of Wheeler’s at the Lessor home, injuring their lip and nose, according to a police report. Later that year, when Wheeler brought him to a State Police barracks during an early morning work assignment, Moose “aggressively approached” a K-9 dog, a State Police spokesperson said.

The bloodiest encounter came this April outside the St. Albans courthouse where Wheeler had long served as deputy state’s attorney and where she often kept Moose in her car. Wheeler invited a defense attorney, Betsy Hibbitts, to greet the dog, opening her rear passenger door, Hibbitts wrote in a sworn statement to police. Moose lunged and bit her lip, which she said was hanging off her face, bleeding.

Hibbitts testified about the episode at the August hearing of the Animal Control Committee, tears in her eyes.

“This didn’t need to happen, and this dog could very easily kill a child,” she said. “Diane is not committed to keeping him safe.”

Wheeler presented a very different narrative at the hearing, characterizing Hibbitts as a predator and Moose as a victim.

“Ms. Hibbitts was the one who intruded into Moose’s space. Ms. Hibbitts is the one who leaned down to kiss him,” Wheeler said. “She trespassed into my car. And so if that had been a human being, that would have been considered prohibited contact.”

The committee had called the hearing because, since it issued its April 2025 order, neighbors had repeatedly reported seeing Moose on Roseade Parkway and spotted him unleashed or unmuzzled this summer at a local school and a park.

“Because of this pattern of continued violations and the escalation in Moose’s violence, I cannot in good conscience suggest that Moose just be barred from a neighborhood or community,” Burlington Police Department community service manager Cassandra Stirling said at the hearing, calling for the dog to be put down. “I fear that he’ll be a danger in any community.”

Wheeler, however, told the committee Moose had “never, ever attacked a person, ever.”

Rather, the dog was simply defending itself from aggressive or untrained people.

“Unless human beings learn [how] to act around dogs, dogs will do this,” she said.

Wheeler conceded she had brought Moose to the school and the park and “three or four times” to Roseade Parkway in emergencies to pick up medicine from the home. But she also claimed to have been gaslighting the neighborhood.

“Once I realized the stalking-like behavior of these neighbors, who are actually more vicious than Moose,” Wheeler claimed, she brought various other dogs to the house to confuse the neighbors. She said she also used trash bags to create “Moose-like statues,” which she kept in the back of her car.

Wheeler’s testimony “felt like a break with reality,” neighbor Llu Mulvaney-Stanak later told the Globe.

They may not remain neighbors for long. Days before the August hearing, the Wheelers put their house on Roseade Parkway up for sale. Around the same time, Wheeler suddenly announced she was resigning from her job as deputy state’s attorney, a role she’d held for more than three decades.

Why did she suddenly resign? And did it have anything to do with Moose? Wheeler did not respond to requests for comment.

Neither Kranichfeld, her former boss, nor Timothy Lueders-Dumont, executive director of the Department of State’s Attorneys and Sheriffs, would comment on Moose or why they continued to allow her to represent the state in court for weeks after the August hearing.

In its order Monday, the Animal Control Committee said Wheeler had “engaged in repeated violations” of its previous edicts — including as recently as last week, when Moose was yet again sighted on Roseade Parkway.

“Moose’s long-standing pattern of aggression and reactivity presents an ongoing public safety risk that will not be abated until he is humanely euthanized,” the committee wrote, ordering Wheeler to surrender the dog immediately.

“It’s a horrible outcome,” Mulvaney-Stanak said. “And yet, this is the only way we can ensure the safety of our neighborhood and everyone else’s community.”

Paul Heintz can be reached at paul.heintz@globe.com. Follow him on X @paulheintz.

STAN GROSSFELD
AS I SEE IT

Jolyon and Sarah Bowman walk along a beach in Madaket at sunset, 21 years and two children after they were married there.

Summer's golden end on Nantucket

NANTUCKET - The last gasp of summer is at once exhilarating and bittersweet.

The autumn equinox arrives on Tuesday. That's when day and night become equal. This won't happen again until the spring equinox on March 20.

But, let's not get too far ahead of ourselves. . . . Before everyone gets bombarded with pumpkin-infused ads or fears of AI taking over the universe, don't get all melancholy about the loss of daylight.

Instead, let us stop and appreciate Nantucket in September. It is a living poster of paradise.

Back in the days of "Moby-Dick," legend has it that captains built widows' walks, so their spouses could climb up and watch for their return. There's something soothing about observing the sea even when it's angry and the blues and frothy whitecaps roll toward the golden shores.

A monarch butterfly dances above the goldenrod before migrating to Mexico.

Try it instead of watching TV, scrolling social media, or surfing the web or overspending on what prophetic Globe columnist Diane White in 1979 called "the money eating island."

The best things here 30 miles at sea are free. Observe the monarch butterflies, dancing back and forth in a field of goldenrod. They are gathering nectar for their upcoming 1,500-mile trip to winter in Mexico. They dart around erratically looking like

GROSSFELD, Page B3

A surfer runs into the frothy seas of Madaket.

Hundreds of flights delayed at Logan

Technical issues at Pa. control center cited

Planes grounded across Northeast

By Tonya Alanez
GLOBE STAFF and Madyline Swearing and Bryan Hecht
GLOBE CORRESPONDENTS

Travel disruptions were expected to continue Tuesday at Boston Logan International Airport after technical problems at a key regional air traffic control center in Philadelphia delayed nearly 500 flights at Logan and grounded planes across the Northeast on Monday.

The disruption eased Monday evening after repairs were completed and airport operations across the region began returning to normal, Transportation Secretary Sean Duffy said shortly in a social media post after 6 p.m.

"It will take some time to clear all existing delays, so please check with your airline for the latest information," Duffy's post said.

Just before 9:30 p.m., 481 flights at Logan were delayed and another 77 canceled, according to FlightAware, which tracks flight data.

"Boston Logan is currently in a ground delay program until further notice," the Massport spokesperson said.

The spokesperson said in an email Monday evening that the effects of the disruption were expected to continue into Tuesday.

The problems began after a circuit failed Monday morning at a Federal Aviation Administration facility in Philadelphia. When the system attempted to switch to a backup connection, workers discovered that a fiber optic line had been cut, according to the FAA.

Duffy said on social media that an Amtrak construction crew accidentally cut the fiber line in New Jersey, causing a telecommunications outage that disrupted air traffic across the Northeast.

At Logan, the FAA equipment issues, combined with ongoing runway construction at the airport, were contributing to the delays and cancellations, according to Massport.

The Massport spokesperson also urged passengers to check with their airlines for the latest flight information.

Confusion and frustration spread
LOGAN, Page B4

Obama warns media ban threatens US democracy

Praises press outlets' solidarity in response

By Michaela Towfighi
GLOBE STAFF

SALEM — Former president Barack Obama criticized President Trump's latest clash with mainstream media on Monday, arguing that barring news organizations from the White House because of unfavorable coverage crosses a fundamental democratic line.

As Trump stood on the South Lawn on Monday, he spoke to the media, but at home, no one could hear. His lips moved without sound.

The cameras still rolled for some news outlets, but without CNN, MSNOW, and Politico — three organizations barred from the White House on Friday following coverage Trump criticized — other legacy outlets in the White House press pool turned off their tapes, too.

The move was a rare sign of solidarity, Obama said, and one that reflected the weight of Trump's decision to restrict press access in response to critical coverage.

"You can't do that and say that you are still living in a democracy," he said. "That's foundational."

In a conversation with Doris Kearns
OBAMA, Page B2

CHARLIE ST. CLAIR 1950-2026

Devoted to motorcycles and his home town, he drove N.H. bike week to renewed glory

By Bryan Marquard
GLOBE STAFF

Early in his tenure leading the Laconia Motorcycle Week Association, Charlie St. Clair was almost constantly on the move, meeting with business owners in New Hampshire's Lakes Region and traveling to biker gatherings around the country.

A pied piper on a motorcycle and on Amtrak — logging more than 25,000 miles by train in 1998 alone, he estimated — Mr. St. Clair led visitors back to New Hampshire from all 50 states. His tireless advocacy drew visitors from all of Canada's provinces, too — along with motorcyclists from Europe and the Middle East.

"He went from one end of the country to the other promoting Laconia Motorcycle Week," said his cousin Cynthia Makris, president of the Laconia Motorcycle Week Association. "People knew him everywhere. He's our homegrown Laconia hero."

Mr. St. Clair was on his annual pilgrimage to the famous Sturgis Motorcycle Rally in South Dakota in August when the rear tire of his motorcycle blew out along Interstate 90 in Avon, Ohio. He was taken to MetroHealth Medical Center in Cleveland and was 76 when he died on Aug. 22 of injuries from the accident.

In 1991, Mr. St. Clair began running motorcycle week, centered around the Weirs Beach area on the western side of Lake Winnepesaukee.

Within a few years of his leadership, the annual number of visitors quadrupled to about 225,000. That total continued to grow, a significant resurrection for New Hampshire event whose reputation and commercial attractiveness suffered after a mid-1960s riot brought numerous

ST. CLAIR, Page B4

INSIDE

To be charged

The UMass Dartmouth student accused of fatally stabbing a football player from the school and wounding another in Providence over the weekend will return to Rhode Island to face criminal charges. B2

Public health

UMass Boston seniors will teach Boston high school students about sexual health and other public health issues, part of a move intended to strengthen a public health workforce. B3

PAT GREENHOUSE/GLOBE STAFF

YOM KIPPUR — Josh Nolan blew the shofar on Monday at the Boston Workers Circle Yom Kippur ceremony in Newton. The program for this highest of Jewish holidays was developed by the membership committee.

BC High probes alleged use of racist language

By Travis Andersen
GLOBE STAFF

Boston College High School is investigating alleged “racist language” from students that surfaced online, officials said Monday.

“We are aware of the TikTok videos alleging use of racist language by students and immediately launched an internal investigation into the matter,” BC High, a Catholic school in Dorchester, said in a statement.

The school did not provide details on the language, say when the incident occurred, or specify how many students were involved.

“The alleged behavior is entirely unacceptable and fundamentally contradicts our mission as a Jesuit, Catholic institution,” the school’s statement said. “Racism in any form will not be tolerated at BC High. We acknowledge the harm caused by these actions and affirm that every individual, both within and beyond our school community, deserves to be treated with dignity and respect.”

It’s not clear if any students were punished, and the statement did not identify the target of the racist speech.

“We will take appropriate disciplinary action in alignment with our school policies, and remain steadfast in upholding a safe, inclusive environment for all,” BC said.

The school also said “student privacy policies prevent us from disclosing the outcome of any disciplinary proceedings.”

In a separate email to the school community Monday, the high school’s president, Grace Cotter, said officials learned of the racist language last week.

“It is with great importance that I write to you today. On Thursday evening, we became aware of TikTok videos alleging the use of racist language by students at Boston College High School,” Cotter said.

She said she recognizes “that these allegations are painful, particularly for our students and alumni of color. To anyone who has experienced racism, I want you to know that we hear you, we take these concerns seriously, and we are committed to ensuring that BC High is a community where everyone feels respected and valued.”

The investigation is ongoing, Cotter said.

“We will not tolerate racist behavior, and we will hold our students accountable for conduct that violates our values,” she said.

Travis Andersen can be reached at travis.andersen@globe.com.

Obama warns against White House media ban

►OBAMA
Continued from Page B1

Goodwin, a Boston-based historian, at Salem State University, Obama warned about the polarization fueled by social media, called for continued conversations about artificial intelligence, and reflected on his days on the campaign trail.

He also praised the collective action of citizens in Minneapolis in response to immigration raids earlier this year.

When it came to Trump, his successor, Obama said the latest confrontation with the mainstream media was predictable but posed a threat to a key pillar of the country.

“I am not surprised that the current president wants to ban guests that are critical of him because he is that guy,” Obama said.

Obama said the First Amendment was once a stake he would plant in the ground in talking with foreign leaders, from China to Russia, urging other countries to embrace a free press and cautioning against imprisoning journalists or relying on a single source of state propaganda.

For years, the White House TV press pool has kept cameras running in places such as the Oval Office and aboard Air Force One, allowing a small rotating group of journalists to cover events and distribute the material to other news organizations.

CNN was scheduled to provide the TV pool coverage Monday, but the White House prevented the network from doing so. CNN, MSNOW, and Politico filed a lawsuit in federal court in Washington, D.C., against the administration, decrying the ban a “direct assault on the First Amendment,” and seeking to have their access restored.

In response, The New York Times and The Washington Post said they would not publish pool photos of the president leaving the White House until midnight, and five other major television networks suspended their coverage.

Obama said the solidarity was necessary and that he would have hoped to see similar collective responses from universities and law firms confronted by pressure from the Trump administration during his second term.

“There was a lack of solidarity around basic principles, and folks got picked off and cowered into portraying what should be some pretty basic core ideas,” he said. “But this one’s actually the Constitution.”

Drawing on his background as a constitutional law professor, Obama predicted that courts would not be able to uphold the ban, even if the case came before judges appointed by Trump. A hearing is scheduled for Wednesday.

Obama also criticized Republican politicians who had not spoken out against the ban, asking them to consider how they would respond if a Democrat president barred Fox News from the White House.

In 2009, the Treasury Department under the Obama administration offered an official for interviews with members of the White House television pool but excluded Fox News. The other networks refused to participate unless Fox was included, and the administration relented.

But Obama’s concerns extended beyond the immediate clash between Trump and the press. He also reflected on how dramatically the media environment has changed since his own rise to prominence, and what fragmentation can mean for politicians trying to reach Americans across ideological divides.

At the 2004 Democratic National Convention, Obama had not yet won his seat in the US Senate. He was the Democratic nominee from Illinois, unheard of outside of his state Senate district of just over 200,000.

Then his message of hope and unity — one that would continue to define presidential campaigns to come — was broadcast onto the televisions of millions of Americans. It was a time when most Americans watched the same channels on television, hearing the same unfiltered message without a spin from outside media.

“The day after that speech, what it made me appreciate was the power of television,” he said, likening the experience to being shot out of a rocket from a high school gym to the national stage.

Today, that message is cut and clipped before a speech is complete. It’s a main warning Obama offers to aspiring politicians and one of his concerns about the fractures of today’s democracy.

The challenge now, he said, is figuring out how to communicate the same message to a loyal reader of The New York Times and a viewer of Fox News, knowing that each may encounter a fundamentally different perspective through the platform they trust.

Obama was the fifth president to participate in the Salem State series, joining Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, George H.W. Bush, and Bill Clinton.

Michaela Towfighi can be reached at michaela.towfighi@globe.com.

UMass student accused of killing athlete will face charges in R.I.

By Shannon Larson
GLOBE STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Dartmouth student accused of fatally stabbing a football player from the school and wounding another in Providence over the weekend will return to Rhode Island to face criminal charges.

Chukwunonso Uzeoma-Eze, 19, pleaded not guilty to a fugitive from justice charge in New Bedford District Court on Monday, according to court records. He waived extradition and was ordered held without bail.

He is expected to be transported to Rhode Island within a week, where he will be arraigned on a murder charge. Providence police also plan to charge him with felony assault, spokesperson Kristy DosReis said in an email.

Uzeoma-Eze allegedly stabbed two freshmen on the UMass Dartmouth football team — 18-year-old running back Marvinns Antoine, and 19-year-old defensive back Kensley Macean — shortly after midnight Saturday in a Wendy’s restaurant parking lot. The violent dispute followed an altercation at a nearby nightclub, police said.

Antoine suffered wounds to the chest and was pronounced dead at Rhode Island Hospital, police said. Antoine graduated from Durrfee High School in Fall River last year.

His teammate, Macean, suffered injuries to the head, neck, and left arm. The Dighton-Rehoboth graduate was also rushed to the hospital for treatment, and his wounds are considered non-life-threatening, police said.

Uzeoma-Eze is not a member of the football team, and there is “no indication” that he knew either Antoine or Macean before the encounter, Providence Police Chief Oscar Perez said at a press conference Saturday.

“My thoughts and prayers go out to the family. I couldn’t believe what they’re feeling, having to mourn their child, who probably they just moved. . . into college two, three weeks ago as a freshman,” Perez said.

Perez said it appeared that all three men were waiting in line to get into Mezzo Lounge, where other UMass Dartmouth football players had gathered, when the venue reached capacity and stopped admitting people.

An altercation then broke out between “a female and some of the victims that were in line” before spilling into the Wendy’s parking lot on Charles Street, Perez said.

The woman “knew the suspect, and that’s where the disturbance and the disagreement escalated,” he said.

Following the alleged attack, Uzeoma-Eze jumped into his car and fled, Perez said. Police used Flock Safety’s automatic license-plate-reading cameras to identify the vehicle, he said.

He was arrested on campus and taken into custody by UMass Dartmouth police. During the booking process, Uzeoma-Eze told police “that he had attempted suicide previously,” according to a police report.

“He then made the statement, ‘Can you just shoot me,’” an officer wrote in the report.

Uzeoma-Eze was later taken to Bridgewater State Hospital, the forensic psychiatric facility run by the state Department of Corrections. He is now being held at Bristol County House of Correction, records show.

Dana Sargent, an attorney representing Uzeoma-Eze, declined to comment through a spokesperson Monday.

Mezzo Lounge was ordered Saturday to remain closed for three days and will face a hearing Tuesday, Perez said. The club, which regularly hosts events for people age 18 and older, could not be reached for comment.

At UMass Dartmouth, a campus only a few weeks into the fall semester is now awash in grief.

“Our hearts and prayers are very much with Marvinns’s family, friends, classmates, and teammates as we mourn his loss together,” said chancellor Mark Fuller in a statement to the school community. “We also send our prayers and best wishes for Kensley’s recovery, and hope that he will be able to resume his education here soon.”

The university is offering counseling services and other supports to students. A candlelight vigil to honor Antoine is scheduled Wednesday evening on the UMass Dartmouth Quad.

His younger sister, Stacie Antoine, started a GoFundMe to help cover funeral expenses in the wake of the family’s “heartbreaking and sudden loss.”

Nearly $29,000 had been donated as of Monday evening.

Shannon Larson can be reached at shannon.larson@globe.com.

The Boston Globe

News

CONTACTS, TIPS, COMMENTS
Switchboard: (617) 929-2000
(617) 929-7400
newstip@globe.com
comments@globe.com
SPOTLIGHT TEAM TIP LINE
(617) 929-7483

Customer service

PRINT AND DIGITAL
(888) 694-5623
customerservice@globe.com

Advertising

DISPLAY
(617) 929-2200
bostonglobemedia.com

CLASSIFIED
(617) 929-1500
boston.com/classifieds

	City	Retail	Other
7-day home delivery	$70.00	70.00	70.00
Sunday-only home delivery	$22.50	22.50	22.50
Daily single copy	$4.00	4.00	4.00
Sunday single copy	$6.00	6.00	6.00

Lottery

MONDAY MIDDAY 4848
Payoffs (based on a $1 bet)
EXACT ORDER
All 4 digits $3,860
First or last 3 $540
Any 2 digits $46
Any 1 digit $5

ANY ORDER
All 4 digits $643
First 3 $180
Last 3 $180
MONDAY NIGHT 0487
Payoffs (based on a $1 bet)
EXACT ORDER
All 4 digits $4,550
First or last 3 $637
Any 2 digits $55
Any 1 digit $5

ANY ORDER
All 4 digits $190
First 3 $106
Last 3 $106
MILLIONAIRE FOR LIFE
Sept. 21 07-14-40-44-51
Millionaire Ball 01
Jackpot: $1 million a year for life; winners

MASS CASH
Sept. 21 02-13-15-24-27
Jackpot: $100,000; no winners

MEGABUCKS
Sept. 21 07-10-18-19-39-44
Jackpot: $656,265; winners

PREVIOUS DRAWINGS

	Midday	Night
Sunday	2639	0856
Saturday	0287	8360
Friday	3053	7632

MONDAY NUMBERS AROUND NEW ENGLAND
Maine, N.H., Vermont
Day: 3-digit 367 4-digit 0366
Eve: 3-digit 111 4-digit 3718
Rhode Island 1528

Connecticut
3-digit 890-7 4-digit 1676-7
POWERBALL
Sept. 21 02-07-09-17-58
Powerball 20 Powerplay 2x
Estimated jackpot: $313 million

This day in history

Today is Tuesday, Sept. 22, the 265th day of 2026. There are 100 days left in the year.

Birthdays: Singer-choreographer-actor Toni Basil is 83. Musician King Sunny Adé is 80. Football Hall of Famer Harold Carmichael is 77. Rock singer David Coverdale (Deep Purple, Whitesnake) is 75. Actor Shari Belafonte is 72. Singer Debby Boone is 70. Singer Nick Cave is 69. Singer Andrea Bocelli is 68. Singer-musician Joan Jett is 68. Actor Scott Baio is 66. Actor Bonnie Hunt is 65. Actor Mireille Enos is 52. Actor Tom Felton is 39. Actor Curry Barker is 27.

►In 1774, Abigail Adams, in a letter to her husband, John, a delegate at the Continental Congress in Philadelphia, wrote of her abhorrence of the practice of slavery and the sense of hypocrisy in the evolving fight for independence: “It allways appeard a most iniquitious Scheme to me – fight ourselves for what we are daily robbing and plundering from those who have as good a right to freedom as we have. You know my mind upon this Subject.”

►In 1862, President Abraham Lincoln issued the preliminary Emancipation Proclamation, declaring all enslaved people in Confederate states should be freed as of Jan. 1, 1863, if the states did not end the fighting and rejoin the Union.

►In 1957, Haitian women were allowed to vote for the first time, 153 years after Haiti became an independent country; François Duvalier was elected president.

►In 1961, President John F. Kennedy signed congressional legislation making the Peace Corps a permanent federal agency within the State Department; it became an independent agency in 1981.

►In 1975, Sara Jane Moore fired two shots in an unsuccessful attempt to assassinate President Gerald R. Ford outside a San Francisco hotel, missing Ford by inches.

►In 1980, the Persian Gulf conflict between Iran and Iraq erupted into a full-scale war that would continue for nearly eight years.

►In 1985, rock and country music artists participated in Farm Aid, a concert staged in Champaign, Ill., to help the nation’s farmers.

►In 1993, 47 people were killed when an Amtrak passenger train derailed and plunged off a bridge into Big Bayou Canot near Mobile, Ala.

►In 2014, the United States and five Arab nations launched airstrikes against the Islamic State group in Syria, sending waves of planes and Tomahawk cruise missiles against an array of targets.

►In 2017, as the scale of the damage from Hurricane Maria started to become clearer, Puerto Rican officials said they could not contact more than half the communities in the US territory, where all power had been knocked out to the island’s 3.4 million people.

►In 2018, militants disguised as soldiers opened fire on an annual military parade in southwest Iran, killing at least 25 people and wounding more than 60. An Arab separatist movement claimed responsibility for the terror attack, the deadliest on Iranian soil in nearly a decade.

First major fall storm could strike coast this weekend

By Ken Mahan
GLOBE STAFF

With astronomical fall set to begin Tuesday, there's no waiting for what could be the first significant storm of the season — a potent coastal system set to materialize midweek off the Mid-Atlantic coast and encroach on New England by Friday, possibly developing into a strong nor'easter.

What we know is that this storm is a lock to develop, but the atmospheric variables naturally have models divided on the probable storm track this far out. A complete miss is on the table, but so is a nor'easter that could impact us through much of the weekend.

Tropical storm in the mix?

You also might be asking, “What about a tropical storm or hurricane?” And it's a good question. I'll explain more on this in a bit, but the seas aren't really warm enough for this storm to be considered “tropical,” so I doubt the National Hurricane Center will label it as such.

Whether New England sees scattered ocets of light rain or strong winds, heavy downpours, and coastal flooding will all come down to the key position and strength of high pressure north of New England by late Thursday into Friday.

Will it be more south and strong enough to bump this storm away? Or keep the door open for the storm to slam the region?

The Globe model reveals a closer, more impactful storm, while the large-scale GFS (Global Forecast System) shows the storm passing out to sea. Even the AI models have wide uncertainty at this point.

If the storm closes in on New England, the onshore winds paired with the higher tides from a full moon later this week could mean some flooding along the coast.

Are early fall nor'easters rare?

September is not usually a nor'easter-producing month; in fact, only about 1 percent of nor'easters on record develop during this stretch. However, this setup reveals a classic nor'easter pattern, with a surface front stalling off the Mid-Atlantic coast on the eastern side of a dipping jet stream (the storm highway). This is the recipe for a new low-pressure system to form, as upper-level winds on the eastern side of this jet stream are so strong that they actually pull up air from the surface and, in most cases, form a storm.

We have to keep in mind that a nor'easter is characterized by winds blowing into the region from the northeast. Any deviation in the storm track can nix that label, but this system would still remain a “coastal storm.” Regardless of label, there is the potential for impacts along the New England coast. I mentioned the full moon, meaning higher tides will make the coast more vulnerable to flooding, but just how impactful remains to be seen as we narrow in on the storm track.

What the models are showing

Let's break down the possible scenarios and what the weather models are saying.

I took a look at surface features and upper-level wind patterns; the jury is still very much out on how things will develop. It does appear that high pressure over southern Canada will be pretty strong, but depending on its position, it will either provide room for the storm to curl into the region or deflect this storm.

• Scenario 1: The European model agrees with the Globe model and pulls the storm in tighter to the coast, which means strong winds, some coastal flooding, and pockets of heavy rain from Friday through a chunk of Saturday.

• Scenario 2: The GFS, ICON, and UKMet models all show the storm pulling farther away from the New England coast, mainly due to high pressure pressing farther south and east over southern Canada and the jet stream progressing more offshore as this storm forms.

• Scenario 3: High pressure could slide south into New England and keep the storm from really progressing north at all, forcing the storm to spin itself out over the Mid-Atlantic with only a few showers pushing into our region.

As of right now, I think we end up seeing a storm that passes nearby, but not as bullish as the European and the Globe models. I think that high pressure does build strong enough to limit impacts, but still — Friday and Saturday could turn interesting with some gusty winds up to 50 miles per hour by Cape Cod, pockets of rain, and some coastal flooding incidents — technically making this event a mild nor'easter.

Of course, this forecast will change with five days to go, but here's an idea of conditions for Friday — windiest by the coast, with rain up to 2 inches.

Could this storm be named?

The short answer is probably not. What's important is that, regardless of title, some coastal flooding is likely. Sea surface temperatures need to be 80 degrees or warmer to fuel a developing tropical storm or hurricane. This storm should lack that heat, making it a coastal storm instead of an official tropical system.

A lot will change within the next few days, so stay tuned.

Ken Mahan can be reached at ken.mahan@globe.com. Follow him on Instagram @kenmahantheweatherman.

As summer wanes, the beauty of Nantucket intensifies

►GROSSFELD
Continued from Page B1

they've already gotten into some tequila.

Jolyon and Sarah Bowman of Washington, D.C., stroll Madaket Beach after a fiery sunset. They were married here 21 years, and two kids, ago. The beach has eroded since then, but their love is still going strong.

Fishermen in their SUVs head toward their favorite Smith Point spots that have been closed for months to protect piping plovers. (Insert mandatory “Tastes Like Chicken” sarcasm here).

It's a great place to tune out the news. Enjoying the killer sunsets also restores some dignity to the color orange.

The water temperature stays in the 60s until October. The lifeguards are all back in school so heed the wisdom of the seal who peeks up occasionally to avoid trouble.

The ferries are still crowded but with fewer tourists and more construction workers.

“People here just want everything done yesterday. They don't care what it costs,” says one worker with a shrug.

At night, the stars come out and the overnight international flights to Europe track overhead. The Milky Way seems to almost hug the island and folks still make a wish when they see a shooting star.

Oliver La Farge, a local mariner, has been hauling boats and working long days all summer. He's holding his 3-month-old son, Bruce, while the ocean sings a rhythmic lullaby and the crickets chirp harmonies.

Clockwise from top, a young girl plays near the surf (the photo was taken with a long lens, which compresses distances); a cyclist has Main Street to themselves in Seconset; and Oliver La Farge holds his 3-month-old son, Bruce, as he stargazes after a long day of pulling boats from the water.

His wife, Liesel, a nurse practitioner, is getting the other two kids ready for bed.

For a moment, he can forget that paradise is pricey. It cost him $195 to fill up his pickup truck and a blueberry pie costs $26.99 at the local market. To help make ends meet, they raised two pigs, refusing to give them names because they are now a freezer full of dinners.

This is the time of year when there's just a hint of coolness at night heading into the other season. Snuggle season.

“You can start to relax a little bit when clients are calling you with their ‘winter wish list,’ especially when peak hurricane season is this quiet,” says La Farge.

“The kids get to see more of me when it gets chilly.”

Stan Grossfeld can be reached at stanley.grossfeld@globe.com.

UMass Boston seniors will teach public health in city schools

By Sarah Rahal
GLOBE STAFF

UMass Boston seniors will head into three Boston high schools this year to teach students about sexual health and other public health issues, part of an initiative intended to strengthen a public health workforce struggling with recruitment and retention.

The program, announced Monday by Mayor Michelle Wu, the Boston Public Health Commission, and UMass Boston leaders, connects students in the university's Urban Public Health program with commission staffers. Students will spend the fall training with public health officials before working in Roxbury Prep, Boston Prep, and the Academy of the Pacific Rim during the spring semester.

Wu said Boston's concentration of universities, hospitals, and research institutions has not, by itself, guaranteed an adequate pipeline into public health careers.

“We have the best academic and health care institutions in the world,” Wu said. “We conduct more medical research here than anywhere else in the world, and we're going to fight for every dollar of NIH [National Institutes of Health] funding and to sustain that, but maintaining that edge and continuing to lead the world in not only health care but public health means making sure we are closing the gaps within our community and investing in the next generation of leadership.”

The announcement was held at UMass Boston and was attended by the university provost, chancellors, City Council members, teachers, and students. City Councilor John FitzGerald, whose district includes parts of Dorchester, said the arrangement could also help Boston continue to retain workers trained in the city.

“About 80 percent of undergraduates stay in Boston after. That means the training that we do and the education that we're giving are staying in our city,” he said.

The partnership comes as health departments nationwide confront persistent workforce problems. A survey of nearly 5,000 public health workers conducted in March found growing concerns about burnout and retention. The Public Health Workforce Interests and Needs Survey asked employees what's changed since 2024, and 35 percent said their feelings of burnout had worsened, including nearly half of workers aged 35 and younger. Among that group, 31 percent said they planned to leave their organization within the next year.

One in four workers also re-

SARAH RAHAL/GLOBE STAFF

Dr. Bisola Ojikutu, commissioner of Public Health for the City of Boston, spoke with students going into public health through the program at UMass Boston on Monday.

ported their opportunities for advancement had worsened.

Boston Public Health Commissioner Dr. Bisola Ojikutu said, “We're at a pivotal moment for public health across the country,” pointing to unstable federal funding, difficulty recruiting and retaining workers, and challenges ranging from infectious diseases and substance use to mental health and persistent health disparities.

“Similarly, academic institutions are also facing significant challenges that threaten the pipeline of public health leaders, scientists, educators, and practitioners that our country desperately needs,” Ojikutu said. “This is the time for us to join forces.”

The UMass Boston initiative

Ojikutu said the coalition has three broad goals: developing a more diverse pipeline of public health workers, getting research and new technologies into practical use more quickly, and using that work to reduce racial and other health disparities.

The need for a larger workforce is not unique to Boston. Public health agencies nationally have struggled for years with turnover and staffing shortages. One analysis cited by the Association of State and Territorial Health Officials estimated that state and local health departments would need 80,000 additional workers to provide basic public health services.

UMass Boston launched its Urban Public Health department in 2022. The program has 65 students entering their second, third, and fourth years and expects enrollment to grow to 100 with this fall's incoming class. Students study epidemiology, environmental health, biostatistics, data science, health systems, and health communication.

Seniors applied for the city program last spring and were selected by the Public Health Commission. During the fall, they will be trained in adolescent health, health education, facilitation, community engagement, and public health practice. In the spring, they will teach high school students under commission supervision.

“Now, we're currently in the training semester,” said Althea Laci, 23, a UMass Boston senior from Quincy who hopes to work in public health policy. “We are learning how to develop curriculum and navigate conversations that can be sensitive. It's a lot of practice, practice, practice.”

Massachusetts requires public schools to provide health education, but districts have discretion over the curriculum. Parents can also opt their children out of lessons.

Trinity Stinson-Salmon, a 21-year-old senior from Brockton, said she was eager for a chance to work directly with young people while figuring out where she fits within the broad public health field.

The program gives students “a more hands-on avenue” than a traditional classroom experience, she said. “We get to have in-person experiences, learn from professionals, but also we get to learn more about ourselves and what we can do.”

Students who do not want to teach can pursue other capstone placements in areas such as policy, health communication, and data analysis, said Patricia Janulewicz, chair of UMass Boston's Urban Public Health Department.

Sarah Rahal can be reached at sarah.rahah@globe.com

Flights delayed at Logan Airport due to technical issues through Logan as passengers crowded flight information screens and lined up for airline assistance. Some discussed potential reasons for delays with traveling companions. Others called loved ones to explain why they might be late, or away for another night. Still others appeared unaffected, checking bags and heading through security as usual.

►LOGAN
Continued from Page B1

Selina Guan, 17, was visiting Boston from her hometown of Phoenix to tour colleges. She said her connecting flight to Chicago was delayed, but her flight from Chicago to Arizona seemed fine.

“I’m trying to change my flight now,” said Guan, navigating American Airlines support on her phone.

Her flight was originally scheduled to leave at 9 p.m. but after multiple delays and an eventual cancellation, she booked another American Airlines flight for 6 a.m. Tuesday.

Guan said she planned to sleep at the airport and had not received a voucher for food or a hotel.

Maria Isabel, 62, was also scrambling to make new arrangements after her 5:30 p.m. American Airlines flight was canceled.

She said she had spent the past five days visiting New York, and then Boston, and was on her way to Argentina.

“We are looking for a hotel to stay tonight,” she said.

Asked whether the airline had offered vouchers for food or other expenses, Isabel said she was told “it’s not their responsibility.”

Isabel said her husband found a flight for Tuesday at 11 a.m., but the unexpected extra night in Boston would come at a cost.

“We’re spending money we don’t have,” she said, pointing to the cost of a hotel and rideshare trips to and from the airport.

Enrique Vasquez, 62, said he had spent the last three months in Spain. He was on his way to Newark when his plane was held on the runway.

“They kept saying it was

PHOTOS BY MATTHEW J. LEE/GLOBE STAFF

probably something with the control tower,” he said, while feeding his dog.

Vasquez said he and his wife waited through lines for baggage check, and then airline support, and had been at Logan for nearly six hours.

“They’ve given very vague info,” he said.

Vasquez said United Airlines provided him and his wife with a $15 snack voucher and an additional $200 per person. He said some of that money will go toward paying for a second pet fee.

On Monday, United Airlines passengers waited in a long line to rebook their flights at Logan Airport’s Terminal B, as passengers at JetBlue Terminal C checked the flight board for the latest information. Nearly 500 flights at Logan were delayed after technical issues at a key regional air traffic control center in Philadelphia grounded planes across the Northeast.

The Federal Aviation Administration’s flight status tracker showed Logan passengers were experiencing delays of about one hour and 45 minutes on average, while FlightAware reported that delay times were increasing at all the affected airports in the region.

Major New York City airports, including John F. Kennedy Airport, were halted for several hours Monday.

The technical problems happened at the same Federal Aviation Administration facility in Philadelphia that caused disruptions at Newark Liberty International Airport in the spring of 2025.

Such regional control centers have two lines that carry data in and out: a primary connection and a backup. The FAA said a circuit on the primary failed Monday morning, and when the system tried to switch to the backup, workers discovered that the fiber optic line had been cut.

Earlier Monday, Duffy said flights were resuming at LaGuardia Airport and Philadelphia International Airport just before 3 p.m., while flights remained paused at Newark, JFK, and Teterboro Airport.

“This incident underscores the need for additional funding to modernize aging infrastructure and prevent disruptions like this in the future,” Duffy said.

FAA administrator Bryan Bedford said earlier Monday that the agency was working on two potential fixes: installing a new circuit for the primary connection and repairing the damaged backup fiber optic line. Verizon technicians also worked to restore service.

“That fiber break is probably 13 hours to repair. It’s massive,” Bedford said, according to a video posted online by a CBS transportation reporter.

Bedford said at the time that the FAA might be able to install a new circuit and restore the primary connection before repairs to the damaged fiber line were completed.

The failed primary circuit was already scheduled to be replaced as part of an overhaul of the nation’s air traffic control system.

Tonya Alanez can be reached at tonya.alanez@globe.com. Madyline Swearing can be reached at madyline.swearing@globe.com. Bryan Hecht can be reached at bryan.hecht@globe.com. Material from the Associated Press was used in this report.

‘What makes New Hampshire such a fantastic state is people like Charlie St. Clair.’

NEW HAMPSHIRE GOVERNOR KELLY AYOTTE, at a celebration of Mr. St. Clair’s life

Charlie St. Clair, ‘such an impact player’ for N.H., dies at 76 arrests.

►ST. CLAIR
Continued from Page B1

“I grew up in Laconia, and motorcycle weekend was an exciting time,” he told The Boston Globe in 1998. “What happened in 1965 broke my heart. For us to be able to get back to what it was is the main thing.”

Known to many as just Bike Week, the rally became a major economic generator for the state under his leadership. “You couldn’t not see his passion for it, and it really was infectious,” Jennifer Anderson, deputy director of the Laconia Motorcycle Week Association, said of Mr. St. Clair’s devotion to the rally.

“It was his pride and joy,” Anderson said. “He was very passionate about it, which is why we have such great relationships with all of our partners and all of our sponsors.”

Part of Mr. St. Clair’s work over the past 35 years as executive director of the motorcycle association was making sure the event billed as the “World’s Oldest Motorcycle Rally” welcomed visitors and participants of all ages from all walks of life.

“This a rally where people come to enjoy themselves,” he told the Globe in 2003. “They are here on vacation.”

Events include memorial and scenic rides, motorcycle races at New Hampshire Motor Speedway in Loudon, live music, and outreach ministries.

At a Sept. 10 celebration of his life, which included a motorcycle procession, Governor Kelly Ayotte said that “what makes New Hampshire such a fantastic state is people like Charlie St. Clair.”

Mr. St. Clair “was such an impact player for this state. He loved Laconia,” the governor said, according to an account of the gathering in The Laconia Daily Sun. “There wasn’t anything that happened in Laconia that he wasn’t involved with and promoting. And his work with Motorcycle Week was incredible.”

PHOTOS BY MICHAEL LICHTER PHOTOGRAPHY

Along with leading the motorcycle association, Mr. St. Clair had served on Laconia’s Planning Board and was a state representative at the time of his death. He was active in organizations including the Lakes Region Chamber of Commerce, the Lakes Region Tourism Association, and the Weirs Action Committee.

An owner or operator of several businesses through the years, he ran the Laconia Antique Center, a 22,000-square-foot downtown operation.

His previous ventures included the Colorado Club restaurant and nightclub — he had finished his undergraduate degree at the University of Colorado in Boulder.

“Charlie as a person was a kindhearted, special soul,”

Two views of Mr. St. Clair on his motorcycle. His look on the bike changed through the years, with an early ponytail disappearing, but what didn’t change was his character. “He was incredibly loyal — loyal to his family and his friends and to the motorcycle community,” said his cousin Cynthia Makris, president of the Laconia Motorcycle Week Association.

Makris said. “He was incredibly loyal — loyal to his family and his friends and to the motorcycle community. And he was very concerned about his beloved Laconia.”

She said his efforts promoting Bike Week’s 100th anniversary, in 2023, helped draw an estimated 420,000 visitors that year.

“Charlie really expanded it,” she said of the event’s reach. “It’s not just in Laconia. People fill up the whole state now, from North Conway to the Seacoast. We bring in over $100 million over those nine days into the state of New Hampshire.”

The third of five siblings, Charles Grant St. Clair was born in Laconia on April 16, 1950.

His parents were Richard H. St. Clair and Constance Salta St. Clair, who founded and ran businesses including Hathaway House in Laconia and The Old Country Store in Moultonborough, N.H.

Mr. St. Clair graduated from Laconia High School and initially attended Bryant and Stratton, a business college in Boston.

While there he helped lead a sit-in of nearly 500 students who occupied the school president’s office in May 1970 as part of nationwide college protests opposing the Vietnam War.

“We’re not radicals,” Mr. St. Clair told the Globe during the protest. But, he added, “we did think it was high time Bryant and Stratton got involved.”

He also was an activist after switching to the University of Colorado, from which he graduated with a bachelor’s degree in history and a minor in education.

As a student union leader, “he was very much a change agent there,” Anderson said.

While leading the Laconia Motorcycle Week Association, Mr. St. Clair and Anderson became friends, colleagues, and confidantes over the years. “I was his person and he was mine,” she said.

In an obituary tribute, she wrote that “it is nearly impossible to capture Charlie’s life, his empathy, and generosity.”

Mr. St. Clair “was a historian, storyteller, motorcyclist, community leader, public servant, businessman, teacher, collector, pyrotechnic, television host, and friend.”

After college, he drove a Checker Cab in Boston for years, she said, and he told stories of how picking up fares during the 1978 blizzard brought a financial windfall.

Before returning to live in Laconia, Mr. St. Clair co-owned a video rental store in Brookline and attended law school, Anderson said, and his jobs along the way included teaching elementary school and putting on fireworks displays.

While in Boston he developed a fondness for $2 bills, which he handed out as change at his Laconia antique business.

On his bike, his look evolved through the years. His early ponytail disappeared, but what he wore heading west to the Sturgis motorcycle rally did not — though they also evolved.

“He wore the same riding clothes to Sturgis every year since 1976 and he is not the same sized man as he was in 1976,” Anderson said with a chuckle.

As he put on a few pounds, strategic tears appeared in the fabric and accommodating backing cloth was sewn in.

“When he does something, he does it and stays with it,” Anderson said. “He was not somebody who loved change. He loved tradition.”

The last surviving member of his immediate family, Mr. St. Clair leaves extended family, including nephews, nieces, and in-laws.

He also considered the motorcycle community, from locals to those in distant states and countries, to be part of his extended family.

“Charlie was very proud of the fact that motorcycle enthusiasts came from all over the world to the Laconia motorcycle rally,” Makris said. “He was the champion of it and wanted to be a treasure of New Hampshire.”

Bryan Marquard can be reached at bryan.marquard@globe.com.

SABRINA SANTIAGO/THE NEW YORK TIMES

From left: Mino Lora, the executive artistic director of the People’s Theater; Lin-Manuel Miranda; his father, Luis A. Miranda Jr.; and the actor Ernesto Concepción Jr., at the theater’s new permanent address in New York.

Theater finds a home in Miranda’s backyard

By Malia Mendez
NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK — When Lin-Manuel Miranda was growing up, his family could not afford Broadway tickets. But on occasion, they would trek downtown from his home in Inwood to see Miranda’s great-uncle Ernesto Concepción Sr. when he visited from Puerto Rico to perform in New York.

On one such trip to the Repertorio Español theater, Miranda decided to don his cowboy outfit. He was 6 or 7 and stuck two squirt guns in the holsters.

When his great-uncle spotted them from the stage, he improvised a marching order: “Pull out your guns! Squirt it at that bad man!”

Miranda, who has three Tony Awards for “Hamilton” and “In the Heights,” looks back at that ad-libbed scene as his first experience with interactive theater — and the kind of moment a child from upper Manhattan will no longer have to take an hour-long train to catch.

Miranda is among the backers of the People’s Theater: Centro Cultural Inmigrante, a new permanent home at 206th Street for an 18-year community theater operation based out of Inwood and Washington Heights. It features two performance spaces, four rehearsal studios, a soundproof practice room, gallery space and lobbies designed for gatherings, exhibitions and events. Every room has a splash, if not a douse, of color.

The performance space was designed by WORKac, an immigrant-founded and woman-led architecture practice. It will further the People’s Theater’s mission to champion immigrant-centered works, and bring the neighborhood together.

“I can use this space and then walk home?” Miranda said, foretelling the response of artists to come.

The theater officially opened its doors Saturday, and performances of its debut production, “Guac,” are set to begin this week. Manuel Oliver wrote “Guac” about his son, Joaquin, who was killed in the 2018 shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Fla.

Days before the grand opening, Miranda’s father, Luis A. Miranda Jr., and his cousin Ernesto Concepción Jr. joined him on a tour of the venue. Mino Lora, executive artistic director of the People’s Theater and its cofounder (with her husband, Bob Braswell), led the way.

Upon arriving at the 19,000-square-foot center, Miranda and his family members flitted about, embracing staff and other project partners as if at a family reunion. They hardly stood still until they saw the entrance to the studio theater that bears the name of Miranda’s great-uncle.

Concepción Sr., a prolific performer and founder of the Actors Guild in Puerto Rico, was the “contagion” responsible for the family’s creative bug, his son said. It was especially fitting, he added, that the intimate studio theater be linked to his father, who took a special interest in supporting budding talent.

Miranda snapped a photo of the name on the wall and then thought better of it, pushing his cousin into the shot. They both smiled wide.

“In my wildest dreams, I never would have thought that on the site of this old Pathmark, would we be here,” Miranda said, referring to a supermarket chain.

Q. I’m 22 and single, and recently a plumbing/heating engineer came to my family home to fix our shower. He was around my age, and I was immediately very attracted to him. But what has really stuck with me is that when I looked into his eyes, I felt this strange, immediate sense of connection and comfort. I’m normally very shy and self-conscious around someone I find attractive, but somehow I felt like I could just be myself around him. I know that feeling was real for me, but obviously I have no idea whether he felt anything similar.

While he was trying to find our water stopcock, he asked, “Does your boyfriend know where it is?” I was caught off guard, laughed, and said, “my parents,” and he apologized. I initially assumed he was simply trying to do his job, but when I told my friend, she immediately wondered whether he was subtly checking if I was single. Now I can’t stop wondering about it.

Afterward, I found his private Instagram through the company he works for and discovered that he’s 22, too. I really want to follow him because — and this is unusual for me — I don’t just want to have a crush from afar. I genuinely want the opportunity to get to know the real person. But because he met me while working in my home, I’m worried that following him would cross a professional boundary or make him uncomfortable.

Would you send the follow request, or leave it alone? And am I reading far too much into the boyfriend question?

INTERESTED

A. I can’t tell you what he was up to with the boyfriend question. It does sound like he was fishing for information, but who knows?

As for the Instagram idea, I say go for it — because you’d be making a request, not a demand. You’d be asking to see his profile, which would give you a way to message him. He can reject your request, ignore it, or even send you a direct message to start a conversation. The ball will be in his court.

As for crossing professional boundaries, I think you’re OK. If this guy was at your house for a long-term project, I might suggest a pause. But this was a one-off repair. He can always disappear.

No matter what happens, please know that many people are at their best at work, when they’re giving you their full attention and showing off their expertise. This man provides comfort and security to people who need hot water. He gets to walk into someone’s home to fix a problem and say things like “stopcock.” When you meet a person in the wild — or on an awkward first date — they might not be able to stare into your eyes

LOVE LETTERS

BY MEREDITH GOLDSTEIN

Can I pursue the plumber?

with confidence, speak with authority, or fix a problem like magic and then walk away.

I’m just saying this man might be different outside of work, and other guys might have those same charms once you see them in better settings.

If this crush doesn’t work out, stay patient. He’s not the only person who can make you feel that kind of spark.

MEREDITH

READERS RESPOND:

Plumbers make good money and won’t be Af’d any-time soon.

SPO9142013

Meredith is seeking questions about everything from dating and marriage to life after divorce. Scan the QR code to make your anonymous submission.

Get his number and CALL him. Tell him you think he’s cute and you’d like to take him out for coffee. I know that Insta’s a thing now, but I’d be really, really flattered if a [woman] reached out to me by phone. Just be direct — guys like it when there are no guessing games. If you must contact him via Instagram, then do it as a direct message and say the exact same thing I wrote above.

BLISTERED-TOE

Yes, go ahead. No harm either way. AUNTIGGYWINK

I will say that this feels like a potential prime example of a double standard. Would we be telling a guy it was OK to reach out to a woman he had interacted with at her job and managed to track down on her socials? Or would we call him a creepy stalker?

THE-BLOG-CONSIGLIERIE

To my mind, in a gender-reversed situation, the guy wouldn’t be creepy if he directly asked her out via direct message. What WOULD be creepy is a follow request from a guy without any message. Less creepy if a woman follows a guy without a direct message; that’s where in the double standard lies.

BLISTERED-TOE

It’s not weird to ask out someone you met via one work interaction, as long as you ask once and take no for an answer if you don’t get a positive response.

DDL314

Send your own relationship and dating questions to loveletters@globe.com. Catch new episodes of Meredith Goldstein’s “Love Letters” podcast wherever you listen to podcasts. Column and comments are edited and reprinted from boston.com/loveletters.

Tuesday September 22, 2026

Tuesday September 22, 2020										Movies		Sports
	7 pm	7:30	8 pm	8:30	9 pm	9:30	10 pm	10:30	11 pm	11:30
2	WGBH PBS	BBC News	GBH Rooted	Roots Donna Brazile, Ty Burrell		New York: A Documentary Film "The Future of Cities" (N)			Amanpour and Company (N)
4	WBZ CBS	Wheel (N)	Jeopardy! (N)	Judge Judy: Unfiltered, Unforgettable (N)			Georgie & M.	NCIS "Deal With the Devil"	News (N)	(:35) Comics
5	WCVB ABC	News (N)	Chronicle	Dancing With the Stars (N) (Live)			R.J. Decker "Manos: Hands of Fate" (N)		NewsCenter 5	(:35) J. Kimmel
6	WLNE ABC	Videos		Whose	Whose	Whose	Whose	Saturday Night Live	SNL Dua Lipa
7	WHDH	Inside (N)	Extra (N)	Family Feud	Family Feud	7 News at 9PM (N)		7 News at 10PM (N)	7 News at 11PM	(:35) Inside
9	WMUR ABC	Chronicle	News (N)	Dancing With the Stars (N) (Live)			R.J. Decker (N)		News (N)	J.Kimmel
10	NBC Boston	NBC 10 Boston News at 7pm (N)		The Voice "The Blind Auditions Part 2" (N)			Got Talent "Finale" (N) (Live)		Boston News (N)	(:35) J. Fallon (N)
10	WJAR NBC	News (N)	Extra (N)	The Voice "The Blind Auditions Part 2" (N)			Got Talent "Finale" (N) (Live)		News (Live)	(:35) J. Fallon (N)
11	WENH PBS	Week-ends	In the America	Roots Donna Brazile, Ty Burrell		New York: A Documentary Film "The Future of Cities" (N)			Amanpour and Company (N)
12	WPRI CBS	Wheel (N)	Jeopardy! (N)	Judge Judy: Unfiltered, Unforgettable (N)			Georgie & M.	NCIS "Deal With the Devil"	12 News at 11 (N)	(:35) Comics
25	WFXT FOX	ET (N)	TMZ (N)	Best Medicine (N) (SP)		Doc "Wherefore Art Thou" (N) (SP)		Boston 25 News at 10PM (Live)		News (Live)	(:35) News (N)
27	WUNI	Rosa "Medidas de seguridad" (N)		Tan cerca de ti, nace el amor (N)		Tierra de amor y coraje (N)		Corazón de oro (N)		Noticias Univisión	(:35) Noticiero
36	WSBE PBS	Last/- Wine	Served?	As Time Goes By	Waiting for God	Upstart Crow	Keep-Appear	Doc Martin		PBS News Hour
38	WSBK	Big Bang	Big Bang	WBZ News 8p (N)		Phantom Gourmet	Jeopardy!	Perfect (N)	Perfect (N)	Flip Side (N)	Flip Side (N)
44	WGBX PBS	Test Kitchen	Antiques	Marlow "Murder in the Dark: Part One"		Marble Hall Murders		Trespasses		PBS News Hour (N)
50	WWJE	Murder USA		Heartland Homicide		Killer Cases		Crime Stories		Unusual Suspects
56	WLVI CW	Young Sheldon	Young Sheldon	WWE NXT (N) (Live)			7 News at 10PM on CW56 (N)		Modern Family	Modern Family
64	WNAC FOX	Family Feud	Family Feud	Best Medicine (N) (SP)		Doc "Wherefore Art Thou" (N) (SP)		12 News on Fox Pr (N)		Seinfeld	Seinfeld
68	WBXP ION	(:55) Chicago Fire "Rear View Mirror"		Chicago Fire "Two Families"		Chicago "Leaving the Station"		Chicago Fire "It Ain't Easy"		Chicago Fire "Merry Christmas, Etc."
PREMIUM CABLE
Cinemax	★★★ Bad Santa '03) Tony Cox, Billy Bob Thornton.			★★ Bad Santa 2 '16) Kathy Bates, Billy Bob Thornton.			(:05) ★★★ The Town '10) Rebecca Hall, Jon Hamm, Ben Affleck.
Flix	(:6:20) ★★ Comet '14) Justin Long.		★★ Indecent Proposal '93) Demi Moore, Woody Harrelson, Robert Redford.			★★ Days of Thunder '90) Robert Duvall, Nicole Kidman, Tom Cruise.
HBO	(:10) ★★ Supergirl '26) Matthias Schoenaerts, Eve Ridley, Milly Alcock.			Siren: The Voices of Shelley Beattie (N)			(:45) Lanterns		(:40) Siren
HBO 2	(:6:45) Jay-Z in 8		(:10) Youth	(:35) Youth	(:05) ★★ Saltburn '23) Jacob Elordi, Rosamund Pike, Barry Keoghan.				(:20) Knock Knock '15) Keanu Reeves.
Paramount-Sho	(:5:50) Star Trek: Se...		★★★ Gravity '13) George Clooney, Sandra Bullock.			★★ Terminator: Dark Fate '19) Arnold Schwarzenegger, Linda Hamilton.				(:15) ★★★ Blade Runner 2049 '17)
Showtime 2	(:6:05) ★★ Homestead '24)		★★ The Mechanic '11) Ben Foster, Jason Statham.			(:35) ★★ The Contractor '22) Ben Foster, Gillian Jacobs, Chris Pine.			Ben Foster, (:25) ★★ Shaft
Starz!	(:10) ★★ The Wood '99) Taye Diggs, Richard T. Jones, Omar Epps.				★★★ Hustle & Flow '05) Anthony Anderson, Terrence Howard.				★★ Behind Enemy Lines '01)
TMC	(:6:20) Run & Gun '21) Ben Milliken.		★★★ Changing Lanes '02) Ben Affleck.			(:40) ★★ The Crossing Guard '95) David Morse, Anjelica Huston, Jack Nicholson.				(:35) Nightwa...
SPORTS
CBSSN	PWBA Bowling				Inside College Football (N)
ESPN	SportCtr (N) (Live)	Count-down	WNBA Basketball Minnesota Lynx at Indiana Fever (N) (Live)			WNBA Basketball Los Angeles Sparks at Las Vegas Aces (N) (Live)
ESPN2	NFL Live Marcus Spears	NFL's Greatest Spears	NFL's Greatest Games (N)		Storyed Becoming Hines Ward			Football	This Is Football	SportsCenter (N) (Live)
Fox Sports 1	Suárez		Gronk & Jules		College Football Houston at Texas Tech From Jones AT&T Stadium in Lubbock, Texas.							College Football
Golf	(:6:00) Live from the Presidents Cup
NBA	(:6:30) WNBA		NBA Playback			NBA Trivia			Top 100 Dunks
NBC Sports	(:6:30) Early (N)		WNBA Basketball Connecticut Sun at Washington Mystics (N) (Live)			Tom Curran's		Boston Sports (N) (Live)		Boston Sports
NESN	(:6:30) MLB Baseball				Extra (N)		Red Sox	Chat (N)	NHLHock..
FAMILY
Cartoon	Burgers	Burgers	Burgers	Phineas and Ferb	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	RickMorty	RickMorty
Disney	Big City Greens	Big City Greens	Phineas and Ferb	Phineas and Ferb	Vampi-rina	Phineas and Ferb	Phineas and Ferb	Kiff	Ladybug	Ladybug
Encore Family	(:6:35) Yellowbird		(:05) Dog Who Saved Summer			(:35) Sea Level '11)			Sea Level 2: Magic A...
Nickelodeon	Friends	Friends	Friends	Friends	Friends	Friends	Big Bang	Big Bang	Big Bang	Big Bang
Nick Jr.	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..	Peppa Pig	Peppa Pig	Peppa Pig	Peppa Pig	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..

Content Ratings: TV-Y Appropriate for all children; TV-Y7 For children age 7 and older; TV-G General audience; TV-PG Parental guidance suggested; TV-14 May be unsuitable for children under 14;

TV-MA Mature audience only Additional symbols: D Suggestive dialogue; FV Fantasy violence; L Strong language; S Sexual activity; V Violence; HD High-Definition; (CC) Close-Captioned

	News	Specials
	7 pm	7:30	8 pm	8:30	9 pm	9:30	10 pm	10:30	11 pm	11:30
BASIC CABLE
A&E	Road Wars	Road Wars	Road Wars	Road Wars	Road Wars	Road Wars	Road Wars	Road Wars	(:05) Road Wars	(:35) Road Wars
AMC	★★ The Beekeeper '24) Jason Statham.				★★ Wrath of Man '21) Jason Statham.
Animal Planet	Louisiana Law "Mr. Bad Guy"		Louisiana Law "Blind Rage"		Louisiana "Fugitive on the Bayou"		Louisiana Law "Storm Surge"		Louisiana Law "Gator Poacher"
BBC America	(6:30) ★★ Deep Impact '98)				★★★ The Perfect Storm Mark Wahlberg, George Clooney.
BET	Celebrity Family Feud Ryan Garcia		Celebrity Family Feud		Assisted Living (N)	Ms. Pat (N)	Comic-View	Ms. Pat Settles It	Martin	Martin
Bravo	Housewives/NYC		The Real Housewives of New York City (N)			Housewives/NYC		Housewives SLC "Chosen Family"		Housewives/OC
CMT	Mama's	Mama's	Reba	Reba	Reba	Reba	Reba	Reba	Gold Girls	Gold Girls
CNN	OutFront (Live)		Cooper 360		The Source With Bobby "Leah Cohen: Pig & Khao" (N)		CNN NewsNight		Laura (Live)
Comedy Central	Family Guy	Family Guy	Family Guy	Family Guy	Family Guy	Family Guy	Family Guy	Family Guy	The Daily Show (N)	(:35) Family G..
CSPAN	(6:00) U.S. House		C-SPAN Primetime				C-SPAN Primetime
CSPAN2	(5:45) Se..		Public Affairs Events			Public Affairs Events			Public Affairs Events
Dest. America	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin	Log Cabin
Discovery	Moonshiners		Moonshiners		Moonshiners		Moonshiners		Moonshiners
Discovery Life	About Face		Stuck		Stuck		Stuck		Dr. Pimple Popper
E!	How I Met	How I Met	How I Met	How I Met	How I Met	How I Met	Cocktail	How I Met	How I Met	How I Met
Encore	(6:05) ★★ Holy Man		★★ Boomerang '92) Eddie Murphy.			★★ Life '99) Eddie Murphy.		Movie
Food	Beat Bobby	Beat Bobby	Bobby's "Titans vs. Kenny Gilbert" (N)		Bobby "Leah Cohen: Pig & Khao" (N)		Triple Threat "Titans vs. Jet Tila"		Bobby's "Titans vs. Avishar Barua"
Fox News	Ingraham (Live)		Jesse (N) (Live)		Hannity (Live)		Gutfeld! (N)		Fox News (Live)
Freeform	★★★★ Toy Story '95) Tom Hanks.				(5:55) ★★★★★ Toy Story 2 '99)		Rachel Zegler, Ansel Elgort.		(4:45) Banshees of Inisherin
FUSE	Eagles: The Long Road			Stevie Nicks: Wild at Heart			Cheaters	Cheaters	Cheaters	Cheaters
FX	(6:30) Equalizer 3 - Final Chapter			Snowfall Saga (N)			★★ The Equalizer 3 - The Final Chapter
FXM	Movie	★★★★ West Side Story '21) Rachel Zegler, Ansel Elgort.				(4:45) Banshees of Inisherin
Hallmark	(6:00) Junebug '24)		The Way to You '26) Kim Matula.				Gold Girls		Gold Girls	Gold Girls
Hallmark Myst.	(6:00) Garage Sale ...		Gourmet "A Healthy Place to Die"				Murder, She Wrote		Murder, She Wrote
HGTV	(6:30) A Very Haunted Renovation		A Very Haunted Renovation (N)		House Shock (N) (P)		House (N)	House Hunters	House Hunters	House Hunters
History	Ancient Aliens		The Proof Is Out There		The Proof Is Out There (N)		(:05) The Proof Is Out There (N)		(:05) The Proof Is Out There
HLN	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic
HSN	Active (N) (Live)	Forensic	Bellezza (N) (Live)		Tuesday Night		Tuesday Night		Bellezza Jewelry
ID	Your Worst "Behind the Barn"		Elv Lives Here		Psycho-path (N)	Psycho-path (N)	Toxic "Until There's Blood" (N)		Letally "Death of a Raiderette"
IFC	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men
Lifetime	Castle		Castle		Castle		(:05) Castle		(:05) Castle
LMN	(6:00) Dying for a Fa...		The Bad Orphan '24)			Betsy Brandt.		Danger in the House '22)
MAGN	Beachfront Reno		Lakefront Barg		Lakefront Barg		Lakefront Barg		Lakefront Barg
MSNBC	The Weeknight		All in (Live)		Briefing (Live)		Last Word (Live)		The 11th (Live)
MTV	Caught in Act		Caught in Act (N)		Best-VMA (N)		Caught in Act		Caught in Act
National Geographic	Gladiators "Nero's Favorite Gladiator"		Gladiators: Warriors		Gladiators: Warriors		Gladiators: Warriors		Gladiators: Warriors
NatGeoWild	Zoo: Tampa		Zoo: Tampa		Zoo: Tampa		Zoo: Tampa		Zoo: Tampa
NECN	News	NBCYOU	Dateline		Dateline		Rescue		OpenHou..	1st Look
NewsNation	Vargas Report		Cuomo		On Balance		Katie Pavlich		Jesse Web
Ovation	Murder "King Memses' Curse"			Leverage		Leverage		Leverage		Leverage
OWN	Deadline: Crime		Deadline: Crime		Deadline: Crime		20/20 on OWN		20/20 on OWN
Oxygen	Dateline: Secrets		Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic
Paramount	(6:00) Raiders of the		Lost Ark		★★★★ Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom '84)		Indiana Jones & the ...
QVC	Jane's Fall (N) (Live)		Basso (N) (Live)		Make Me Over, Maria (N) (Live)		Skin Care (N) (Live)		Skin Care (N) (Live)
Science	Secrets in the Sand		Secrets in the Sand		Secrets in the Sand		Secrets in the Sand		Secrets in the Sand
Sundance	Law & Order "Blood Libel"		Law & Order "Remand"		Law & Order "Corpus Delicti"		Terror "November in My Soul"		(:10) ★★ Cape Fear '91)
SyFy	(6:00) ★★ Ghost Rider '07)			★ Ghost Rider: Spirit of Vengeance '11)				Hunger Games: Ballad of Songb...
TBS	MLB Baseball Tampa Bay Rays at New York Yankees (Live)						MLB Baseball
TCM	(5:30) Young Philad...		★★★★ The Four Musketeers '75)				★★★ Robin and Marian '76)
TLC	1000-lb Sisters		1000-lb Sisters (N)		1000-lb Sisters (N)		1000-lb Roomies (N)		Last Resort
TNT	(5:30) Godzilla x Ko...		★★ Jurassic World: Fallen Kingdom '18)				★★★ Godzilla vs. Kong '21)
Travel	Portals to Hell		Portals to Hell		Portals to Hell		Portals to Hell		Portals to Hell
TruTV	MLB Baseball Tampa		Bay Rays at New York Yankees (Live)				MLB Baseball
TV Land	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	(:20) Raymond		Raymond	Raymond	King	King
TV One	CosbySh..	CosbySh..	Lv Single	Lv Single	Lv Single	Lv Single	Lv Single	Lv Single	Lv Single	Lv Single
USA	Law & Order: SVU "Gambler's Fallacy"		Law & Order: SVU "Reasonable Doubt"		Law & Order: SVU "Thought Criminal"		Law & Order: SVU "Spring Awakening"		Law-SVU "Holden's Manifesto"
VH-1	Chris	Chris (N)	★★ The Photograph '20) Issa Rae.					★★★ Love & Basketball
WE	Criminal Minds		Criminal Minds		Criminal Minds		Criminal "Distress"		Criminal "Jones"

LivingArts

BENJAMIN ROSE

Bill Mootos as Joe Keller (left) and Mark Souza as Chris in Lyric Stage Boston’s production of Arthur Miller’s “All My Sons.”

By Don Aucoin
GLOBE STAFF

In “Arthur Miller: American Witness,” his biography of the playwright, John Lahr wrote: “Of all the historical and personal forces that fed the making of ‘Death of a Salesman,’ none was more important than a moment in 1947 when Miller’s uncle Manny Newman accosted him in the lobby of the Colonial Theatre in Boston, after a matinee of Miller’s play ‘All My Sons.’”

While the details of that encounter at the Colonial and the ways in which Miller modeled Willy Loman on his uncle need not be recounted here, it’s a reminder that on more than a few occasions our city has helped shape theater history.

In the present day, we’re being treated to a very fine Lyric Stage Boston production of “All My Sons,” reminding us that Miller had created a work of profoundly enduring resonance even before writing “Salesman,” widely regarded as the greatest American play.

Directed by Scott Edmiston, with a superb performance by Bill Mootos at its center, this “All My Sons” is a powder keg of a production whose fuse is lit early on and slowly burns while we watch and wait.

On Sunday, however, that fuse sputtered a couple of times in Act One; a certain tentativeness on the part of a few cast members made you wonder if they could bring about the Act Two reckoning in all its devastating force. As it turned out, they could and they did.

In Lyric Stage’s ‘All My Sons,’ a family faces a harsh reckoning

STAGE REVIEW

ALL MY SONS
Play by Arthur Miller
Directed by Scott Edmiston
Presented by Lyric Stage Boston.
Through Oct. 18. Tickets $25-$95.
617-585-5678, lyricstage.com

missing during the war, though Kate clings fiercely to the belief that Larry might still be alive and could return any day, essentially forcing Joe and their other son, Chris (Mark Souza) to go along with her delusion. But Chris has had enough; he’s about to deliver a jolt to his mother by making a proposal of marriage to Ann Deever (Josephine Moshiri Elwood), who was Larry’s girlfriend. For Chris to marry Ann is to effectively declare Larry dead.

Further complicating matters is the fact that Ann is the daughter of Steve. She views what she believes to be her father’s crime as unforgivable. However, Ann’s brother, George (Quinton Kappel), has visited their father in prison and learned a thing or two. And when George arrives at the Keller home late in Act Two — a haunted-looking figure who seems to have drifted in from a Tom Waits song — a confrontation is at hand.

Edmiston’s staging is simple, straightforward, and sensitively modulated, in recognition that the high moral stakes and emotional fire-works of “All My Sons” require no bells and whistles.

In that same minimalist spirit, the set design by Lyric Stage mainstay Janie E. Howland aims for visual efficiency: the façade of the Keller home, a patch of yard, a bench. The lighting design by Karen Perlow, another Lyric Stage regular, is subtle, periodically heightening a moment but in general not calling attention to itself. Oleg Smirnov’s original compositions and sound design beautifully capture the play’s shifts in moods and variations in character.

In Mootos’s skillfully calibrated portrayal, Joe is a salesman of a sort: He’s selling a story and a version of himself. Ever so slightly, Mootos suggests the weaselly quality beneath Joe’s folksy demeanor. When Joe’s world falls apart, Mootos makes the moment overwhelming.

In his stage directions, Miller calls Kate “a woman of uncontrolled inspirations,” a description vague almost to the point of opacity, and Duncan didn’t appear to have a firm fix on her character at the start Sunday. But her performance steadily deepened and darkened as the play went on, capturing the contradictions of a woman consumed by grief one moment, retreating into icy detachment the next.

As Ann, Elwood managed — as this splendid actress invariably does — to be both economical and expressive, never giving a scene more than it needs, never shortchanging it, either. Souza, who seemed too subdued as Chris early in the play, compellingly summoned the son’s anguish and fury as the facts of the matter dawned on him — or, rather, as he was forced to confront what he had always known, deep-down.

In a program note, director Edmiston writes: “Joe and Kate Keller are decent people who want to protect what’s theirs.” The first half of that proposition is highly arguable. As for the second part, its broader truth — the truth Miller wanted us to understand — is perhaps better captured in a bitter observation made by Chris in “All My Sons”: “This is the land of the great big dogs; you don’t love a man here, you eat him!”

Don Aucoin can be reached at donald.aucoin@globe.com. Follow him @GlobeAucoin.

Who gets a seat at the toilet? Historian Bryant Simon has answers.

By Janira Skrbkova
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

Bathrooms might seem like an unlikely site for academic research — but not for self-proclaimed toilet scholar Bryant Simon.

“For Customers Only: Public Bathrooms and the Making of American Inequality” is his fifth book, out Sept. 21, and explores how restroom access — or lack thereof — reflects nationwide injustices.

The author and Temple University history professor will visit Dorchester restaurant Comfort Kitchen to discuss his new book on Sept. 26. The award-winning Uphams Corner restaurant resides in a Columbia Road building that had been first constructed as a public restroom in 1912. Also joining the event — which is presented in partnership with bookstore JustBook-ish — is Lisa Lewis, a senior project manager at Historic Boston Incorporated, who will share the story of the building’s preservation and transformation.

Comfort Kitchen derives its name from the phrase “comfort station,” the term for municipal bathrooms built in the 20th century. Comfort stations provided broad toilet access until the 1940s, when public officials nationwide grew anxious that gay men, the unhoused, and drug users were illicitly loitering in the privacy of said spaces. Then, with the onset of the civil rights movement, some city governments decided to shutter the doors on public restrooms rather than integrate them, Simon explained.

“For Customers Only” details the construction of these municipal facilities, their policing and subsequent closure, our contemporary reliance on the private sector for restroom access in the absence of public facilities, and examines restrooms as a subject of heated social debate.

“Every protest movement of the 20th and 21st century had its moment at the bathroom door,” Simon told the Globe. “The gay rights movement, the civil rights movement, the women’s rights movement, the movement for more adequate housing, and, obviously, the trans rights movement.”

Boston’s own storied history of public bathroom inequity includes a 1973 “pee-in” at Harvard University. When Harvard began allowing women to take entrance exams for admission, administrators made one key oversight — the testing center, Lowell Lecture Hall, had no women’s restroom. As a result, female test takers were forced to rush across the street, costing them exam time, Simon explains in “For Customers Only.”

Prominent Black activist Florynce Kennedy, an early member of the National Organization for Women and founder of the Feminist Party, took to Harvard in support of the test takers, leading a protest outside Lowell Lecture Hall in which demonstrators poured jars of fake urine down the steps.

Harvard’s failure to account for its prospective female students is just one of many instances in “For Customers Only” that illustrate how the fight for restroom access is ultimately a fight for public space. Even after getting past the hurdle of finding a facility, oftentimes, restrooms widely considered to be public — those of cafes, restaurants, and storefronts — are conditionally accessible, Simon explained, citing a 2018 incident at a Philadelphia Starbucks in which two Black men asked to use the restroom, were denied access unless they made a purchase, and were arrested for trespassing.

“Maybe you present in such a way that a store bathroom is open to you,” Simon said. “But for two young Black men, that might require buying something. ... When the private sector controls [a restroom], it might appear public, but it isn’t public to everyone.”

Instances like these beg the question: What makes a restroom truly public?

Simon defines these facilities as “generally maintained by a public entity and open to anyone,” but under that framework, there might be far fewer than we think.

In 2016, The city of Cambridge opened a freestanding, 24-hour toilet kiosk in Harvard Square following the 2012 closure of the public restrooms in Christ Church Cambridge, Simon details in “For Customers Only.” The kiosk, commissioned to match the area’s high-traffic tourism, is a “Portland Loo,” a single-occupancy restroom that officials rolled out in Portland, Ore. in 2008.

There are Portland Loos in Amherst, Greenfield, and Provincetown. In Boston, the city recently released a map of more than 175 locations with access to public restrooms, drinking water, and other essential amenities, including MBTA stations, local fire departments, and coin-operated city toilet stalls.

“We all take our chances when we leave the house,” Simon said. “Ultimately, I think political leaders would benefit from being more aggressive in public bathroom building. ... [We need] progress on this front that affects people in their most intimate and bodily ways.”

Bryant Simon at Comfort Kitchen. Sept. 26, 1-3 p.m. 611 Columbia Road, Dorchester. comfortkitchenbos.com. RSVP on Eventbrite.

Janira Skrbkova can be reached at janira.skrbkova@globe.com.

TV HIGHLIGHTS

Baseball: Guardians-Red Sox, 6:45 p.m., NESN
NHL preseason: Flyers-Bruins, 7 p.m., NESN+
Baseball: Rays-Yankees, 7:05 p.m., TBS
WNBA: Sun-Mystics, 7:30 p.m., NBCSB
Listings, C6

Sports

THE BOSTON GLOBE TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2026 | BOSTONGLOBE.COM/SPORTS

CHRISTIAN KANTOSKY FOR THE GLOBE

Contributions by players such as Anthony Seigler (center) helped the Red Sox win 32 of 37 games from June into August.

Many magic moments have brought Sox here

By Tim Healey
GLOBE STAFF

In their darkest moments, when they were running out of time, all the Red Sox had was faith. Nearly halfway through the season, at the bottom of a bad American League, in a sport dominated by data and measurables, virtually all available evidence led to a consistent conclusion: The 2026 Red Sox were just not good. They fired the manager a month in. They lost key players to long-term injuries. They showed little life. And so they were left with mere belief. Belief in themselves, belief that they could salvage it, belief that how could it possibly stay like this forever? “We all still had faith in each other,” Garrett Whitlock said. “Human beings still do the thing. All the numbers and data would have counted us out and all that kind of stuff. And the players in this clubhouse were like, hey, we can stick with this.”

Or, at least that’s what they said. “We wouldn’t have said it if we didn’t believe it,” Caleb Durbin said. Improbably, incredibly, here they are. They clinched a spot in the postseason Sunday, allowing aspirations of late October in a season that felt over in June. The moments that marked their ascent were many, an almost endless series of sliding doors and what-ifs, minor-turned-monumental plays. Recently, in a series of interviews, some of these Sox reflected on their favorites. “The fun thing about a season,” Durbin said, “is that there’s a whole lot of moments you can look back on that tell the story.”

The Schlitt Show
The date: June 25
The playoff odds (via FanGraphs): 10.6 percent
The moment: Caleb Durbin homers off Cam Schlittler Remember how dire it felt on June 25. In the end, it was the start of the Red Sox’ run. When Boston had last played at Fenway Park, it got swept by the Blue Jays, including a gut-wrenching finale in which the Sox rallied for a late tie only to lose. Emanating from the stands were loud boos and chants of “sell the team,” sentiments and sounds burned into the players’ psyche. Just before they returned, the Sox dramatically dropped two of three to the Rockies. Durbin partially dislocated his left pinkie sliding head-first into first base. On the way back from Colorado, plane problems delayed their Boston arrival to 5 a.m., about 14 hours before the first pitch of a four-game series against the Yankees. “And,” Isiah Kiner-Falefa said, “Schlittler.” On the mound that night was right-hander Cam Schlittler, the Walpole native and emerging Yankees ace, who ended the Red Sox’ season last year. The weekend was ripe for misery. And it was the beginning of everything.

RED SOX, Page C2

Take a minute to give Breslow his due

PETER ABRAHAM
ON BASEBALL

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Craig Breslow stood in a puddle of beer in his stocking feet Sunday, watching the team he assembled celebrate having clinched its spot in the postseason. That’s when he realized he still had his phone in his pocket. The Red Sox’ chief baseball officer carefully picked his way down the hallway to put it out of harm’s way before he got even more soaked. “Smart move,” Breslow was told. “It might be too late,” he said, laughing. You can always get a new phone. How often can you enjoy the satisfaction of proving that an entire city, if not an entire industry, was wrong? Breslow made what remains the most stunning move of this baseball season when he fired Alex Cora and six of his coaches April 25 after only 27 games. Breslow was convinced the team had potential it would not realize under Cora and needed a change. “I believed in the players that we had, and I felt it was really important that we acted definitively and decisively when we did so that we could create an environment around the players that was supportive, that would allow them to thrive, and they responded,” he said. “And, while there may have been some people that questioned what this group was capable of, I think they answered.” Some people? How about most of us? It was not a straight line to success. The Sox were 13-16 in the first 29 games under interim manager Chad Tracy, and I wrote in late May that it was time to start rebuilding by getting a jump on the trade deadline. With Roman Anthony and Garrett Crochet on the injured list, it seemed obvious the Sox weren’t going to contend. There were loud “sell the team” chants at Fenway Park. Tracy’s record was 22-29 three weeks later, and even the players had started to question what was going on. “We’re not good. We’re just not a good team right now. That’s just a fact,” right-hander Sonny Gray said after a 4-3 loss against the Blue Jays on June 18. I wrote the next day that it felt inevitable the Sox would be sellers and could well finish the season with 95 losses. Some executives from other teams believed Breslow could only save his job by turning veterans into prospects.

ON BASEBALL, Page C2

NFL WEEK 3
PATRIOTS AT JAGUARS
Sunday, 1 p.m., CBS

Diggs sure would come in handy right now

BEN VOLIN
ON FOOTBALL

The 2026 season couldn’t have begun much worse for the Commanders. They lost to the Eagles in the opener and got blown out by the Cowboys in Week 2. Jayden Daniels suffered another dislocated left elbow on Sunday and is out indefinitely. Dan Quinn and the coaching staff are on shaky ground. Yet one move the Commanders nailed was the signing of Stefon Diggs. You know, the guy who was Drake Maye’s top target last year, and was the heart and soul of the Patriots’ locker room as they made a surprise run to the Super Bowl. Diggs caught five passes for 47 yards and two touchdowns Sunday, a week after he went for 55 yards and a touchdown.

He leads the Commanders in all three receiving categories, he’s producing even with backup quarterback Marcus Mariota, and he has been healthy and available, playing 80 snaps over two games. Diggs also is relatively cheap, costing the Commanders just $7.15 million guaranteed, with bonuses and incentives up to $12 million. Why the Patriots had to move on from Diggs, I still don’t understand. They’re spending $29 million on A.J. Brown, who is out 4-6 weeks with a sprained ankle, and $20 million on Romeo Doubs, who did have three catches for 96 yards on Sunday but cost them dearly in Week 1. The Patriots could have kept Diggs for, say, $10 million and Kayshon Boutte for $3.67 million. Instead, they took away Maye’s two favorite receivers,

ON FOOTBALL, Page C4

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

Patriot rookie Gabe Jacas (right) didn’t stop pressing, even against Steelers backup QB Mason Rudolph in mop-up time.

Edge Jacas makes most of more snaps

By Nicole Yang
GLOBE STAFF

Breaking down the snap counts from Sunday’s Patriots-Steelers game . . . 1. Rookie edge rusher Gabe Jacas played 49 snaps (70 percent of the defense’s total) — a significant jump from Week 1, when he played 19 (38 percent). The increase in playing time was in part because of Dre’Mont Jones suffering a shoulder injury that sidelined him for the second half. But Jacas looked as though he belonged. In the fourth quarter, with the Steelers driving, the ball popped out of wide receiver Germie Bernard’s arms as cornerback Charles Woods made the tackle. Jacas grabbed the ball and ran 11 yards before getting taken down by Aaron Rodgers. The play sealed the game for the Patriots and capped another impressive showing. After registering a sack in Week 1, he continued to make his presence known with his tenacious, physical style. In addition to his tip-drill pick, Jacas pressured Rodgers for a quarterback hit in the first quarter and chased him down on a scramble in the second. After the game, Rodgers told Jacas, “Great [expletive] job, man.” According to Jacas, the two also engaged in a fun back-and-forth during the game. He said at one point Rodgers told him, “You just keep trying to take my head off.” If Jones misses time, Jacas

PATRIOTS, Page C4

INSIDE

Winning his spot

DiPietro (right), the reigning AHL MVP, wants Bruins to save room for him. C3

Designs on improvement

Murray out to lead BC men’s basketball to NCAAs in his first year as coach. C5

Balanced approach

The Malden boys’ soccer team is off to its best start in 14 years. Notebook, C6

MATTHEW J. LEE/GLOBE STAFF

Will Masters make youth scene better?

MATT PORTER
ON HIGH SCHOOLS

STOW — The first pep rally on the campus of Masters Academy International shuffled through landscaping that will need a few years to fill in to the edge of an unfinished parking lot. Leading the parade of some 300 students, parents, teachers, and staff was the Acton-Boxborough High School band, as MAI does not have its own. Or a cheerleading team. It does, however, have an optimistic fan base that includes the Massachusetts governor, who said she might have applied had it existed when she was a young hoops obsessive. “When I was 12 years old, every night, I did 500 sit-ups and 100 fingertip push-ups, and I thought I was going to play in four Olympics,” Maura Healey said to the crowd gathered last Tuesday. “That did not work out.” She then recited the popular hymn: sports changes lives. Basketball helped her get into Harvard, and she played a couple of years in Europe. Even those who don’t go pro, she said, will learn the values of teamwork and discipline and self-confidence. It landed with nods and applause. Even though MAI has yet to hand out a diploma, the families assembled in front of Healey were betting big — tuition is $65,000 for day students and nearly $80,000 for boarders — that they were making the right play. We’ll see. MAI claims to offer the best of athletics, academics, and campus life on the sprawling 82-acre former Bose complex in a rural town known for its apple orchards. “Greatness without compromise” is its motto, which caused more than a few chuckles among coaches and administrators in the established prep school scene. It is partly a story of two brothers with a dream, but also an outgrowth of our region’s insatiable thirst for sports. Healey’s remarks at the rally included shoutouts to our four major men’s pro teams’ 39 combined championships, Payton Tolle’s immaculate inning, and the

ON HIGH SCHOOLS, Page C5

Baseball

‘Right there is when it changed. Oh my God, that was awesome.’

CHAD TRACY on the Red Sox’ four-game sweep of the Yankees, which began with a 6-3 comeback victory over Cam Schittler on June 25

JIM MCISAAC/GETTY IMAGES

The stars were aligned on July 12 for the Red Sox, who were able to celebrate their ninth straight victory after the Mets’ Francisco Lindor booted a grounder in the ninth to open the door.

Many magic moments have brought Sox here

► RED SOX
Continued from Page C1

“It’s a very discernible line in the sand: the Yankees series at home,” interim manager Chad Tracy said.

The Red Sox were hitting like they had barely slept the night before, so Schlittler cruised into the fifth inning. But when a Yankees fielding error prolonged the frame, the Sox managed to tie it.

Up came Durbin with the go-ahead run on base. Durbin, back in the lineup a day after popping that pinkie back into place, homered to left field — just high enough and just far enough, off the lip of the Green Monster.

The dirt dog Durbin? Against that team, off that pitcher, after that travel and those losses? “That was the big defining moment of the year,” Kiner-Falefa said. “Turned the whole attitude of the team around.”

The Red Sox trailed for half of an inning the rest of the series, sweeping all four games. Still in a huge hole, they were 10 games under .500 at 36-46. But for the first time, they had something tangible to build on, not just blind belief.

“Right there is when it changed,” Tracy said. “Oh my God, that was awesome. But like, was that a blip? That’s what people think.”

The comeback
The date: July 12
The playoff odds: 40.5 percent
The moment: Francisco Lindor’s error leads to ninth consecutive win Against the Angels, against the White Sox, after an overnight flight delay trying to escape Chicago, despite rolling up to Citi Field just two hours before scheduled first pitch, the Red Sox won eight consecutive games to take them into mid-July.

It was a significant accomplishment, especially considering it took them three months to win more than three in a row.

Unfortunately for the Sox, that is where the win streak was going to end. The Red Sox had two hits heading into the ninth inning against the Mets.

With a runner on first base and one out in the ninth, Romy Gonzalez hit a hard ground ball right at Mets shortstop Francisco Lindor. It was a ready-made double play. The game was over, and so was the streak . . . until it wasn’t.

“The guy has a Platinum Glove,” Whitlock said. “Oh, now it’s our turn,” Connor Wong said. “Everything was going wrong for us, and then the one thing kind of went right for us.”

“He makes that play, we lose. And we somehow win that game,” Durbin said. “That was probably our biggest game of the year. Not because of who we beat, but because of the way we won that game.”

Lindor failed to turn the double play. He failed to get even one out.

The ball ricocheted off his chest, everybody was safe, Devin Williams lost the strike zone, Durbin walked to load the bases, Andruw Monasterio walked to force in a run, and Jarren Duran singled to bring in the tying run. The Red Sox won in 10 innings.

JOE BUGLEWICZ/GETTY IMAGES

Wilyer Abreu celebrates his go-ahead homer in the seventh against the Rays, resulting in the Red Sox’ 12th straight win.

Opportunity knocked, and the Red Sox kicked the door down.

It was the difference between an 8-1 road trip, a solid week-plus with a total dud of a loss heading into the All-Star break . . . and a stunning 9-0, feeling great going into four days off, with a chance to bring the momentum home.

If the win streak had ended at eight, would the Sox have won the next six after the break? Would they have grabbed such a strong hold on a wild-card spot? Would they have known what it felt like to stage late comebacks — the theme of their summer surge?

“Even that ninth inning, though, we needed five people to do the job, and they all did. That was the first time that happened,” Durbin said. “That kind of sparked the feeling of ‘OK, we’re a team that if we need to get something going, we can.’”

Tracy said: “Two weeks ago, we were pretty entrenched as the worst team in the American League. Now, we were holding a spot or were really close. I felt like that was — for the whole group — all right, we have turned this around and we have a legitimate chance now.”

The homecoming
The date: July 17-22
The playoff odds: 50.3 percent to 61 percent
The moment: “There’s so many,” Tracy said, leading to six more wins

Upon returning from the All-Star break, the Red Sox reached the chaotic, fever dream, “How is this possible?” portion of their turnaround.

Every game — four more wins against the Rays, then two against the Orioles — seemed to bring out a more electric version of Fenway Park than the one before.

For the Red Sox, that was the most gratifying. Their lowest low, several players said, wasn’t getting dumped in Denver. It was struggling in Boston and hearing it from the home crowds. They went 17-27 at Fenway in the first half.

How to pick just one moment?

For win No. 10, the first game back from the break, the Red Sox beat Tampa Bay, 10-0. It was resounding.

“That was like an important statement game for us,” Greg Weissert said.

For No. 11, the second game of a doubleheader, the Rays scored two runs in the top of the first and the Red Sox came right back with three in the bottom half. That got them back to .500 and into a tie for a playoff spot.

“Relentlessness,” Trevor Story said.

For No. 12, Wilyer Abreu’s fourth homer in two games was a go-ahead shot off Garrett Cleavinger, capping a four-run rally in the seventh.

“When you win that many games in a row, there’s usually three or four of them that you’re probably not supposed to win,” Tracy said.

For No. 13, Sonny Gray tossed a quality start in an actual low-stress afternoon.

“It’s hard to remember everything,” Wong said.

For No. 14, Durbin went deep again, in the eighth against Tyler Wells to break a tie. Fourth-string shortstop Tsung-Cheng Cheng recorded the final out with a leaping catch of a line drive to save two runs.

Even for the Red Sox, the believers, it strained belief.

“It comes off the bat and you’re like, ‘Oh no.’ And [Cheng] out of nowhere snares it,” Tracy said. “Everybody’s fired up in the coaches’ room and you fist bump. You shake your head like, ‘Holy [expletive]. We did it again.’ There were plenty of those for sure behind the scenes.”

For No. 15, they scored four runs in the first inning, leaving no doubt and matching the franchise record win streak set in 1946.

Later that day, July 22, the Red Sox lost the second game of a doubleheader. The streak was over — for real this time. The season is not.

That 15-0 run was part of 27-3 and 32-5 stretches, some of the wildest in franchise history.

“It was maybe the beginning of August, I think, when someone was like, ‘Hey, you realize we’re six games up in the wild card, right?’” said Whitlock, not a standings tracker. “Wait, what?”

“That’s a testament to the people that we have,” Durbin said. “As a player, we have talent. We have a lot of talent to do the job. But [after] the start we had, it takes the person to continue to push forward and come out of it the way we did.”

“I never doubted it, our ability to come together at some point and turn this thing around,” interim bench coach José David Flores said.

“To be honest with you, it was kind of shocking the way we did it.”

Tim Healey can be reached at timothy.healey@globe.com. Follow him @timhealey.

Breslow was right about this team, but job is far from done

► ON BASEBALL
Continued from Page C1

You know what happened next. The Sox went on a season-saving 32-5 run and are now a threat to make a deep run into October. They are the first team in history to lose 44 of their first 75 games and make the playoffs.

“You stared impossible in the face with the position we were in,” Tracy told his players Sunday.

Breslow did not see any particular series or moment as a turning point.

“I think the turnaround was the result of incremental change, incremental improvement, changes to the way that we practice, the ways that we trained, the way that we delivered information to our players, the way that we supported our players,” he said.

“So I think when you put all those things together, they compound, and then ultimately the performance on the field by way of wins and losses was the last thing to catch up.”

Breslow spent 12 seasons pitching in the majors and grew a beard with the rest of the wild bunch Red Sox of 2013. He appeared in 10 of the 16 playoff games that season and got three huge outs in the eighth inning of Game 6 in the ALCS.

His job now is giving others that opportunity. But in the end, you’re standing in the same puddle of beer with a big smile.

“The obvious difference is I didn’t have a direct impact on the outcomes of games in this role, whereas I did as a player,” Breslow said. “But I think there’s a different sense of gratification when you’re kind of part of this massive effort to identify players and bring them in and help support the coaching staff.

“It’s very different, and in some ways it’s maybe a couple of layers removed. But it’s certainly as satisfying.”

Breslow has earned that satisfaction. The job’s not over, but he had it right about this team.

Peter Abraham can be reached at peter.abraham@globe.com. Follow him on Bluesky at peteabeglobe.bsky.social.

MARK TAYLOR/GETTY IMAGES

Craig Breslow soaked in the atmosphere of the Red Sox’ locker room Sunday.

Pro football

CAROLINE BREHMAN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rams quarterback Matthew Stafford bounced back from his poor Week 1 game by tossing four TD passes Monday night.

NFL NOTEBOOK

Dart-less Giants can't stop Rams

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Davante Adams made eight catches for 195 yards and hauled in two of Matthew Stafford's four touchdown passes, and the Rams welcomed Aaron Donald back to the NFL with a 28-6 win over the Giants Monday night in Inglewood, Calif.

Stafford passed for 327 yards for the Rams (1-1), who capitalized after the Giants (1-1) lost Jaxson Dart to a left knee injury on their first offensive series.

The Rams played without injured All-Pro Puka Nacua and Myles Garrett, but Stafford and Adams put on a vintage performance while the preseason Super Bowl favorites rebounded competently from last week's 27-7 debacle of a loss to the 49ers in Australia.

Adams's catches and yards receiving were both his best performances in a Rams uniform, while league MVP Stafford moved into sixth in NFL history with his 426th career TD pass.

Jameis Winston went 11 of 27 for 111 yards with an interception in place of Dart, who left the field shakily after taking a huge hit from Byron Young and Josaiah Stewart on New York's seventh play. The second-year quarterback watched the second half in a track suit while the Giants managed just 182 yards of offense compared to LA's 481.

The night was also a milestone for Donald, who had three tackles for the Rams while completing his comeback with his first NFL game action in 32 months.

Williams update

Bears coach Ben Johnson called Caleb Williams's right hamstring injury a "week-to-week" situation while offering a largely positive update a day after the quarterback was carted off the field.

Williams left Sunday's 9-3 loss to Minnesota after he got hurt on a scramble deep in Vikings territory with about 7½ minutes left. The No. 1 pick in the 2024 draft was replaced by Tyson Bagent.

Johnson said he doesn't think Williams will practice this week, but he isn't ruling him out for Chicago's home matchup with the Eagles next Monday.

By Christopher Price
GLOBE STAFF
FOXBOROUGH — While Mike Vrabel wouldn't get into specifics on Monday morning, it sounds like the Patriots will be without right guard Mike Onwenu for at least a few weeks.

Onwenu, who went down with an ankle injury in the first half of Sunday's win over the Steelers, was carted off the field and ruled out almost immediately.

After the game, a league source said X-rays showed a broken ankle. On Monday, Vrabel would not confirm the extent of the injury, and he was cautious when asked about a potential timeline.

"I don't think he'll be available in the short term, so I wouldn't anticipate him being out there in the next few weeks," Vrabel said. "So if that changes, if it ends up being longer than that, then we'll let you guys know."

Over his seven-plus seasons in the NFL, the 28-year-old Onwenu has distinguished himself as one of the most durable offensive linemen in the game. From 2022-25, he never played less than 93 percent of the Patriots' total offensive snaps in the regular season. In 2025, no one played more regular-season snaps; Onwenu was involved in 1,082 offensive snaps, or 98.9 percent.

Against the Steelers, Onwenu was replaced by veteran Greg Van Roten, who played 40 snaps.

"I think he had a few plays he'd like to have back — so would everybody — but I thought he had some positive plays," Vrabel said of the 36-year-old Van Roten. "Go through an entire game, there's going to be some good ones, and some bad ones, and some ones that we have to eliminate. I think that he stepped in there, was ready to go, and then we'll have to kind of figure out who the next guy is. And if it's Greg, then you know, make sure that he's as ready to go to work with [right tackle] Morgan [Moses] and [center] Jared [Wilson] as possible."

Vrabel didn't dismiss the idea of first-round pick Caleb Lomu moving to guard. "There's a lot of things we could look at," Vrabel said. "Caleb's been trying to predominantly practice and be there and be ready to go playing tackle, you know. So we've got some guys that we can move in there, and Caleb would be one of the guys that we could possibly do that."

BARRY CHIN/GLOBE STAFF

Morgan Moses (right) showed support to injured fellow offensive lineman Mike Onwenu as he was carted off.

"But again, we just have to make sure that we have the best five available, and then have the other three guys that are versatile on game day."

A lot of next men up

The Patriots also lost edge rusher Dre'Mont Jones (shoulder), safeties Craig Woodson (shoulder) and Dell Pettus (ankle), and tight end Eli Raridon (thigh) in Sunday's win.

In the absence of Jones, they got contributions from youngsters Gabe Jacas and Elijah Ponder. Jacas had a pair of tackles, a pass defended, one quarterback hit, and the first interception of his NFL career. "I'm not where I want to be, not yet," Jacas said after the game. "There's a lot to improve on, and I just want to continue to improve. I feel like this [week] I improved, but no, doesn't stop here. Each game. It's a long season, so you just want to improve each and every week." "Gabe's been very conscientious," Vrabel said of the second-round pick. "There's going to be mistakes, but he usually finds a way to correct them. He's coachable. I've talked about him; he's in here early. He's meeting with [outside linebackers coach Mike Smith] and everybody else, and making sure that he's doing everything he can to help his teammates."

Around the football

Ponder, who is in his second season, had five tackles, one sack, a team-high three tackles for loss, two quarterback hits, and scored the first touchdown of his career when he scooped up a fumble after a Christian Barmore sack of Aaron Rodgers and went 19 yards for the final score of the afternoon. "Good things happen when you're around the football," Vrabel said of Ponder, who also had a fumble recovery in last season's AFC Championship game in Denver . . . At safety, newcomer Jaylen Reed, who was acquired from Houston in exchange for wide receiver Kayshon Boutte just before the start of the regular season, played 28 snaps alongside Kevin Byard, as well as 18 on special teams, including as the punt protector. Even before Sunday's game, Reed had been pushing Pettus for the role of third safety. If Pettus is sidelined, Reed's role could continue to grow. "Jaylen's done a nice job. He's worked hard," Vrabel said. "He got put in there, and again, we have to be ready to go. Some plays that are good. He's helped us in the kicking game. He would go in there at [punt protector], that's not an easy thing to do, so I'm glad that he was prepared and ready to go."

Christopher Price can be reached at christopher.price@globe.com. Follow him on Bluesky at christopherprice.bsky.social.

Jacas picks up slack after Jones's injury

►PATRIOTS
Continued from Page C1

will step into a starting role alongside Elijah Ponder. Seventh-round pick Quintavious Hutchins, who played 16 defensive snaps on Sunday after zero in Week 1, will rotate in. Undrafted rookie Xavier Holmes is available off the practice squad.

Edge rusher was one of New England's thinnest positions headed into the season, so the emergence of Jacas is welcomed. As the Patriots start to face tougher offenses (e.g. Jaguars in Week 3, Bills in Week 4), though, he will be tested.

"He cares an extreme amount," coach Mike Vrabel said. "The thing about Gabe is that he can work through mistakes. I think that's really critical for any young player trying to improve is — you have to be willing to make new mistakes, be OK with that, and be able to be coached."

2. In his season debut, running back TreVeyon Henderson out-snapped Rhamondre Stevenson, 33-20. He also out-carried Stevenson, 16-6.

The split was likely influenced by Stevenson's fumble on the opening possession. Stevenson started the game, and he should have maintained the lead-back role, but his ball-security issues prompted the coaching staff to make a change. Stevenson's 20 snaps were his fewest since December 2023.

Henderson flashed his burst and speed in the first quarter with one of his signature explosive plays, this time a 39-yard touchdown. But he still needs to establish better consistency. On all other plays, Henderson averaged 2.47 yards per carry.

Moving forward, the Patriots should probably rely on a 1-2 punch involving both players. Stevenson will continue to maintain an important role as a pass catcher and pass protector, so it will be worth watching how the staff chooses to divide the carries.

3. The Patriots lost several players to injuries on Sunday.

The aforementioned Jones, who played 42 snaps in Week 1, played just 18 before exiting with a shoulder injury. Rookie tight end Eli Raridon, who had 38 offensive snaps in Week 1, played just 11 before being lost to a thigh injury. Safety Dell Pettus, who played 20 defensive snaps in Week 1, suffered an ankle injury on one of his eight special teams snaps and did not play on defense.

Right guard Mike Onwenu, who played 100 percent of the offense's snaps in Week 1, played all 15 before getting carted off the field with a broken right ankle. Safety Craig Woodson, who played 100 percent of the defense's snaps in Week 1, played 46 snaps before leaving with a shoulder injury.

4. Cornerback Christian Gonzalez played 100 percent of the defense's snaps for the second straight week. Gonzalez matched up against wide receiver DK Metcalf 34 times, according to the NFL's Next Gen Stats, and held him to three receptions for 11 yards.

"Gonzo wants those challenges," Vrabel said. "You can see the competitive spirit." 5. Despite A.J. Brown's absence, wide receiver Kyle Williams maintained his minor role. He played just 11 snaps (20 percent) and caught one of his two targets for a 10-yard gain on third down. For all the optimism surrounding Williams, there is still limited evidence that he can take on a larger role within the passing attack.

Mack Hollins led all receivers with 39 offensive snaps, followed by Romeo Doubs (37), DeMario Douglas (26), Williams (11), and Efton Chism (10). Doubs led all receivers with three catches for 96 yards, but it didn't feel as though quarterback Drake Maye had a new go-to guy.

6. Fullback Reggie Gilliam saw an increase in offensive snaps, 13 in Week 1 to 20 in Week 2. The injury to Raridon could have played a factor. Fifteen of Gilliam's came as a run blocker and five came in the passing game, where he caught a pass for 4 yards.

7. Rookie right tackle Caleb Lomu made his offensive debut late in the fourth quarter, coming in for Morgan Moses on New England's final possession for four offensive snaps. In Week 1, Lomu contributed exclusively on special teams.

Although Lomu has focused primarily on tackle, Vrabel on Monday left the door open to move him inside to guard to account for Onwenu's absence. Greg Van Roten took Onwenu's place on Sunday, with Ben Brown also available.

Nicole Yang can be reached at nicole.yang@globe.com. Follow her on X @nicolecyang.

Diggs, working well for the Commanders, sure would come in handy now and they're spending a lot more for less.

►ON FOOTBALL
Continued from Page C1

Other observations from Week 2: ■ The Bills look like legitimate Super Bowl contenders, and the Dolphins definitely stink, with two blowout losses. Coach Jeff Haflay is doing himself no favors by reminding Miami's players and fans that wins and losses don't matter this year (unless tanking is the point, which it probably is).

The Jets, though, might actually be decent. They throttled the Titans in Week 1, then took the Packers to the limit in Week 2, losing, 20-17, in overtime. Offensive coordinator Frank Reich has been great for Geno Smith, and the defense held Green Bay to 199 yards.

But Aaron Glenn, who was lucky to keep his job this offseason, proved again that he is overmatched as head coach, making two inexplicable game-management decisions at the end. One was refusing to call a timeout when the Jets forced a Packers fourth down with 1:05 left, forgoing an opportunity to break a punt return or drive 50-60 yards for a winning field goal.

The other was receiving the overtime kickoff instead of playing defense first. With the current overtime rules, it's better to kick off in OT — you know what you need on the second possession, and you have all four downs to use. Glenn instead took the ball, went three-and-out, and gave the Packers a short field to kick the winning field goal.

■ Colts coach Shane Steichen, meanwhile, showed us in a 33-30 loss to the Chiefs why teams that get the ball second in OT need to play for the win and not the tie.

Facing fourth and 8 from the 15-yard line with 3:15 left, Steichen opted for a short field goal to tie the score instead of going for the win. The decision not only ensured that the Colts wouldn't win the game, but gave the Chiefs plenty of time to drive a relatively short field and get into range for the winning field goal, which they did.

Going for it on fourth and 8 could have led to the Colts losing on the spot, but was the only way they could have actually won. Saints coach Kellen Moore got it right in Week 1 when he went for the win in OT against the Lions, even though the play failed.

■ Speaking of Moore, he was the Eagles' offensive coordinator when they won the Super Bowl two years ago, and he's proving to be an excellent head coach in New Orleans. The Saints pulled off an impressive win at Baltimore on Sunday, controlling the clock for more than 12 minutes in the fourth quarter with two long touchdown drives, the latter of which went 16 plays and took the clock from 8:06 to 1:28.

Tyler Shough completed 79 percent of his passes for 252 yards, a touchdown, and no interceptions, and may be more than just a "poor man's Josh Allen," as Ravens defensive coordinator Anthony Weaver called him.

Tracking former Patriots
Texans WR Kayshon Boutte: Had a modest three catches for 37 yards in the 20-6 loss to the Bengals, but Texans quarterback C.J. Stroud has been terrible.

Cardinals QB Jacoby Brissett: Threw for just 95 yards on 28 passes against a stingy Seahawks defense.

Jaguars WR Jakobi Meyers: Had only one catch for 28 yards in the loss in Denver and has been overtaken on the depth chart by Parker Washington and Brian Thomas.

Chiefs WR Tyquan Thornton: Had four catches for 86 yards with a long of 45 to help the Chiefs improve to 2-0.

UNC coach Bill Belichick: Dropped to 2-1 after failing to protect a 17-3 lead in a loss to Clemson, the kind of defeat that brings the administration closer to firing him.

Quick hits
■ Uh-oh, the Bengals have a defense. Trading the 10th pick for defensive tackle Dexter Lawrence was one of the best moves of the offseason.

■ Based on his reaction to his moderate hamstring injury, Caleb Williams seems like he'd be a big Paul Pierce fan.

■ No matter his quarterback, Jaxon Smith-Njigba is unverifiable.

■ The Titans have kicked a touchdown 57.1 percent of the time, with no other team over 36 percent and league average at 16.3. Just giving away yardage.

■ Browns fans had to be disappointed with Sunday's win at Tampa Bay. Now they can't bench Deshaun Watson for Sunday's home opener.

■ Per ESPN, the Vikings are the first team in NFL history to win four straight games with four starting quarterbacks, dating to last year (Max Brosmer, J.J. McCarthy, Kyler Murray, and Carson Wentz). Kevin O'Connell can coach.

■ Brian Flores coaches with his hair on fire (if he had hair). His blitz rate through two games is 75.3 percent, with the next team at 46.6 percent.

■ The Falcons are the second team this century (2008 Rams) to not have any red-zone trips through two games. Now their next three games are on national TV. Ugh.

■ It is patently ridiculous that Colts owner Carlie Irsay-Gordon, in her second full year of ownership, is still patrolling the sideline and listening in to the coaches' headsets during games. No coach deserves to be micromanaged to that degree, and the Colts will struggle to find quality candidates the next time they have an opening.

■ After losses at home to the lowly Raiders and Cardinals, let's see how long Jim Harbaugh and Mike McDaniell can coexist. That's a lot of quirk for one coaching staff.

Ben Volin can be reached at ben.volin@globe.com.

COURTESY BOSTON COLLEGE

Luke Murray thinks Boston College men's basketball already has made strides.

‘Infinite ideas’ of Murray have BC thinking NCAAs

By Trevor Hass
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

For most of Sunday’s scrimmage, Boston College men’s basketball coach Luke Murray stood in the background and observed the action through an analytical lens.

He smirked occasionally, encouraged players when they missed shots, and tilted his head slightly when cutters were out of position. Murray didn’t say much, but he didn’t have to.

When assistant coach Mathew Johnson approached him and asked for a play to unlock UConn transfer Jacob Furphy, Murray grabbed his black ballpoint pen and illustrated a diagram that resembled a never-ending maze. Murray has a nearly limitless, ever-evolving file in his brain, and those in the program believe his superpower as an “offensive genius” is the ability to unveil those plays at the exact right moment.

“It keeps turning over like a cog,” Furphy said. “It just keeps going and going and going and going, concept after concept. The more we can drill those concepts in, the more our plays will be executed perfectly.”

In recent years, Boston College adopted former coach Earl Grant’s “Gritty, not pretty” mentality a bit too literally. The Eagles played with passion, but they lacked the organization and discipline to execute high-level offensive concepts in crunch time.

With two-time national champion assistant Murray at the helm, and essentially an entirely new roster and staff, those involved believe qualifying for the NCAA Tournament this season for the first time since 2009 is a realistic mission.

“That’s absolutely our goal,” Murray said. “A goal less than that is probably not worth having. That’s our motivation. That’s what we’re pushing for and that’s what we’re pushing toward.”

That quest began back in March, as Murray prepared for March Madness opponents while contemplating his future. Before the Sweet 16 matchup with Michigan State, he stared at the contract in his inbox as UConn head coach Dan Hurley entered the room.

Hurley asked Murray what he thought. Murray told him he was leaving, they hugged, and then it was back to business. The Huskies beat the Spartans and Duke in scintillating fashion. Murray came to BC for his introductory press conference, then flew to Indianapolis for the Final Four.

Missing a practice for the first time ever felt strange, and compartmentalizing both jobs was tricky, but he appreciated that the Boston College administration let him finish at UConn.

The morning after the title game, with a new job title and blank canvas, it was time to fully unfurl his personalized blueprint.

“In my BC email, which I had no understanding of how to access, there were 12 notifications of guys going in the portal,” Murray said. “People had made their decisions. At the time, it felt daunting.”

But he chipped away, conscientiously putting the puzzle pieces together with his own flavor and assistance from HD Intelligence, a basketball analytics company. Murray, 41, whose dream job as a kid was to become an NBA general manager, now gets to operate in a similar role with total creative freedom.

“He’s always had that hunger, from my conversations with him, to lead his own program,” Johnson said.

Outside of basketball, the lion’s share of his work this off-season has centered around fund-raising through donors, alumni, and personal connections. Murray knows the next step for the program is to make strides in the third-party realm, and it’s a challenge he embraces.

On the court, Murray is proud of how the team has grown the past few months but knows there is more work to be done. His system heavily features off-ball screens and movement, with shooting all over, switchability on defense, and the sum of the parts outweighing any individual.

Brandon Benjamin, Money Williams, Andrija Bukumirovic, Armoni Zeigler, Furphy, JB Frankel, Aly Tounkara, and Colby Duggan were catalysts Sunday, but spots are up for grabs in the coming weeks as he narrows his rotation.

It’s a new era, a new style of play, and a new face of the program in Chestnut Hill.

“As a hooper, you think you know it all until you come across Luke Murray,” Williams said. “It’s just infinite ideas.”

Trevor Hass can be reached at trevor.hass@globe.com. Follow him on X @TrevorHass.

FRANK DELL’APA
ON SOCCER

Miller, Revolution coming into own

FOXBOROUGH — Peyton Miller probably received his quota of wish fulfillments in the last week.

First, Miller gained a call-up to the United States national team, which means he could be on the road to playing in the 2030 World Cup. Certainly, a milestone in the career of an 18-year-old soccer player.

But that achievement took a backseat on Saturday night, as Miller converted twice in the Revolution’s 4-2 victory over Orlando City SC.

“I’ve dreamed of this moment since I was a little kid,” Miller said. “Score the winning goal in Gillette, and take my shirt off, so, it’s a great feeling.”

Not satisfied with removing his jersey, which earned him a caution, Miller flung it into the stands for good measure. The goal snapped a 2-2 deadlock in the third of 11 added minutes, so Miller had to reclaim his jersey — teammate Tanner Beason handed it to him, neatly folded — and return to action.

The idea for Miller and the Revolution would be to pack in the defense, and they even had Carles Gil retreating to the penalty area to make a headed clearance. But then, they resumed going all-out forward — and Gil, trailing the play on an 80-yard run, finished the sequence with his 12th goal of the season on a low shot.

The Revolution (14-8-4, 46 points) moved into second place in the Eastern Conference, and stayed there after Inter Miami drew with San Diego, 2-2, Sunday night. New England visits Real Salt Lake Saturday, when Miller and Brooklyn Raines will be with the United States competing against Peru in Orlando.

“Do I believe both of them can be part of the 2030 World Cup? I do,” Revolution coach Marko Mitrovic said of the young pair. “I think both have very high ceilings and are national team-profile players. They have the talent and potential to get there. But, as I said, they still have a long way to go to become consistent national team players.

“What I love and appreciate is the way they approach every day, how they take care of themselves, and how they’re trying to become the best versions of themselves. That’s what gives me confidence that we’ll root for them in US jerseys in four years at a World Cup.”

COURTESY NEW ENGLAND REVOLUTION

Peyton Miller used his speed to score twice on Saturday, including a stoppage-time winner to beat Orlando City.

This could be just the start for Miller, who could compete in multiple World Cups, along with having a European club career. On Saturday night, though, Miller went all in with the Revolution in an eventful contest.

Gil opened the scoring with a deflected shot in the 19th minute. Early in the second half, though, Orlando City seemed to be gaining control before the Lions’ momentum was interrupted as a Martin Ojeda pass banged off referee Sergii Boiko’s face.

Soon after play resumed, Miller broke away, taking a Dor Turgeman pass and finishing past Maxime Crépeau in the 59th minute.

Too early to celebrate, though, as Orlando again began dictating the tempo. Ivan Angulo cut the deficit in the 62nd minute, then a Miller handling violation led to Ojeda’s penalty-kick equalizer in the 88th.

“Honestly, I couldn’t believe my eyes, you know?” Miller said of the call, following a four-minute delay for a VAR review. “I’m happy we bounced back from it, and happy I scored.”

Breaking the deadlock, Miller outmaneuvered Robin Jansson in finishing a pass from Diego Fagundez.

“It’s crazy, I kind of knew he was going to play me the ball,” Miller said. “Diego has been a great mentor for me, and I continue to learn from him every single day.”

Miller is following in the footsteps of Fagundez. He became the Revolution’s youngest signing in 2023 at 15 years and 215 days — 58 days younger than Fagundez — then the second-youngest to make his MLS debut, 16 but 79 days older than Fagundez was in 2011.

“He was a baller, playing since he was 15-16, and I just knew I wanted to be like him one day,” Miller said.

Fagundez is one of the Revolution’s leading scorers, with 53 goals, third on the all-time list behind Taylor Twellman (101) and Gil (61). He returned to the team this season, two years after winning the MLS Cup with the Los Angeles Galaxy.

As youngsters, both Fagundez and Miller attracted national team attention while commuting to the Revolution Academy — Miller from Unionville, Conn., before enrolling in the team’s residency program; Fagundez from Leominster. Miller has been competing for US junior teams since 2022. Fagundez, though, was limited to US U-14 appearances, until it was revealed he was born in Montevideo — he went on to appear for the Uruguay U-20 team.

“We’re all so happy for him,” Fagundez said of Miller. “He’s been putting in the effort and he’s getting all these chances and he’s finishing them. Maybe he’s just trying to catch up to me in goals and assists.

“But it’s awesome to see. He’s just in the right place right now, and we need him to stay hungry that way, and keep being in those places and keep scoring.”

Frank Dell’Apa can be reached at frankdellapa@gmail.com.

SportsLog

Hayes retires after Russia cameo

Dorchester native Kevin Hayes, who starred at Boston College and played 12 seasons in the NHL, announced his retirement from pro hockey on Monday. Hayes, 34, played in five games this season with AK Bars Kazan in Russia’s KHL before calling it quits. “I have decided to end my hockey career,” he said in his retirement announcement, posted by the KHL. “I can no longer play at the level I am capable of because my body does not allow me to perform at my best. And I cannot accept not being in top form.” In 805 NHL games, Hayes had 185 goals and 260 assists while playing for the Rangers, Flyers, Penguins, Blues, and Jets. He was also the younger brother of the late Jimmy Hayes, who appeared in 331 NHL games, including 133 with the Bruins from 2015-17. During four years at Boston College, Hayes had 44 goals and 88 assists and helped the Eagles to the 2011-12 national championship. The Blackhawks selected him with the 24th pick in the 2010 NHL Draft.

Ovechkin has lower-body injury

Alex Ovechkin is day to day with a lower-body injury, ahead of the Capitals’ Oct. 2 season opener at Carolina. The NHL’s career goal-scoring leader did not play in Washington’s preseason opener against the Bruins on Sunday, and a team spokesman said Monday he did not practice with the non-game group either. The Capitals beat the Flyers, 5-2, in Hershey, Pa., on Monday night. Ovechkin, 41, is back for his 22nd NHL season. He played all 82 games last season, scoring 32 goals with 32 assists.

BASKETBALL

Clippers pick Ballmer’s fill-in

The Clippers hired John S. Gibson as interim CEO and governor, taking over the roles previously held by team owner Steve Ballmer, who has been banned by the NBA. The league suspended Ballmer for one year, fined the team $30 million, and forced it to forfeit five first-round draft picks for circumventing the league’s salary cap. Ballmer said the team has paid the fine. Gibson will immediately oversee the team’s basketball and business operations and represent the Clippers in league voting matters. Gibson, a longtime Clippers season ticket-holder, spent the last six years as a trial lawyer and litigation partner at DLA Piper in Los Angeles, where he co-chaired the firm’s US Business & Commercial Litigation practice . . . Doc Rivers, who was enshrined into the Hall of Fame this year, will serve as an analyst on games this season across NBC, Peacock, and NBCSN . . . Versatile forward Nicolas Batum is retiring following an 18-year NBA career. The 37-year-old averaged 9.6 points, 4.7 rebounds, and 3.0 assists during his career with the Trail Blazers, Hornets, Clippers, and 76ers.

SOCCER

Revolution’s Miller recognized

Good news continues to roll in for Revolution winger Peyton Miller. Days after being called into camp for the US men’s national team for the first time, he scored twice in New England’s 4-2 win over Orlando City on Saturday, a performance that earned the 18-year-old MLS Player of the Matchday. Saturday marked the Connecticut native’s first multi-goal game. He already has set career highs with seven goals and four assists. Teammate Carles Gil, who also scored twice Saturday, was the runner-up. Miller joins Alhassan Yusuf as the only Revolution players to take Player of the Matchday honors this season. Miller and Brooklyn Raines, who also earned his first call-up to the national team, and Israeli internationals Ilay Feingold and Dor Turgeman will not be available Saturday night when the Revolution (14-8-4, 46 points) visit Real Salt Lake . . . Spain has agreed to extend the contract of World Cup-winning coach Luis de la Fuente through the 2032 European Championships.

Will Masters make a good addition?

►ON HIGH SCHOOLS

Continued from Page C1

number of medals (eight) that Massachusetts athletes won at the 2024 Summer Olympics. She also name-checked the region’s women’s teams — the Fleet (hockey), Legacy (soccer), and Guard (lacrosse), and declared “we are going to get a [WNBA] team here someday — maybe some of you can play on it.”

Of course New England would be the spot for an IMG Academy-style startup run by Chris and Peter Masters, two club hockey coaches. The market is hot. They are capitalizing.

Tom Farrey, executive director of the Aspen Institute’s Sports & Society Program, which studies the youth sports ecosystem, said he understands why.

“I have no doubt Masters will be able to build a good business on the dreams of children from wealthy parents in New England chasing downstream rewards: athletic scholarships, preferential admission to selective colleges, and maybe a chance to play professionally,” he told the Globe.

“The question is: Can they deliver an experience that aligns with best practices in athletic and child development? The evidence suggests that the best way to develop an athlete is to help a child fall in love with sports, hold off on specializing in one sport until high school, and pair it with an education that develops their human and not just athletic potential. Because most of these kids are not actually going to make a living playing sports.”

Burnout is a major issue in youth sports. Studies have shown that 70 percent of kids drop out by age 13 and specialization is a contributing factor, researchers say. Out-of-control costs driven by privatization is another major concern, leaving the door to entry inaccessible to many families.

Could the arrival of private sports academies such as MAI have a worsening effect on those issues in Massachusetts?

“No,” Healey told the Globe. “I do think the point about the need to have some balance is important, and cross-training is important, and the mental and psychological aspects are also important.

“Kids are under a lot of pressure these days, and so that’s why you know any educational institution needs to make sure that it’s providing those supports, as well. And I’m confident that academies like this can do that, and it’ll lead to more successful scholar athletes.”

Emery and Raegan Lawton, All-American lacrosse-playing twins from Portsmouth, N.H., transferred to MAI after three Division 1 state titles at Portsmouth High.

They wondered if MAI was “too good to be true at first,” Raegan said. But they connected with “everyone’s passion and their love and how they are willing to do basically whatever to help us succeed,” Emery said. “And also the values that the school encompasses, like not sacrificing academics for athletics.”

At public school, their mom Kirstin said, the twins were “burning the candle at both ends,” and lacking proper sleep. They are eager to have everything on one campus — and to have teachers who will be forgiving about classroom deadlines.

The Lawton twins, who have committed to play lacrosse at Penn, also played varsity soccer the last three years. Raegan said they’ll miss that, but they also might play in an adult league someday, like their father, Ed. Their grandparents still play golf and tennis.

They might not make a living in sports, but sports are their lives.

“Burnout and stuff, I feel like that’s not really been a problem for us ever,” Emery said. “We both just have such a passion for lacrosse. ... We just can’t wait to be so involved with it every day here.”

Kirstin acknowledged her daughters have missed a lot because of sports. They have essentially given up weekends and nights out. Social invites don’t come as often, because friends know they likely won’t be available.

But they’re excited to get to know, learn from, and be inspired by their new teammates.

“Everyone here,” Kirstin said, “has the same goals.”

Matt Porter can be reached at matthew.porter@globe.com. Follow him on BlueSky at mattypoports.bsky.social.

ALEX YU/GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

Coach Jeremiah Smith (left), with co-captain Juan Caballero Valencia (front) alongside, is in his 22nd season at Malden.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS' SOCCER NOTEBOOK

Balanced Malden off to a stellar start

By Alex Yu
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

A 6-7-5 finish last fall did not sit well with the returning players on the Malden boys' soccer team. "This group of kids decided in the spring that they were going to train together, and that is definitely showing with how we're playing," said 22-year coach Jeremiah Smith of his 4-1 squad, which is off to the program's best start in 14 years. Smith has emphasized distributing the ball with quick passes. The result: seven players have scored goals.

"We really try to activate the midfielders in the offensive third and that has made a huge difference," said Smith, who teaches English at the high school. "We also have some outside backs that are really taking on an attacking role."

Malden already has eclipsed its win totals from the 2022, 2023, and 2024 seasons.

Minus a true striker, the Tornados focus on balance, putting more bodies up front to create scoring chances. On the back end, seniors Iyad Doukkali and Yusuf Zoulgami play nearly every minute, stopping any attacks in the middle.

"Sharing the responsibility in the workload is something that we can do to keep this going," said Smith. "We're trying to keep fresh bodies on the field, and I don't see a huge dropoff when we go to the bench this year, which I've definitely seen in the past."

Senior captains Abdul-Mohaimen Kalefa and Juan Caballero Valencia preached work ethic throughout the summer, pointing to the league they organized to get players acclimated and in shape early.

"Everyone in the school thinks that football's the only sport," said Caballero Valencia. "I want them to recognize soccer here, too . . . That's one of the best sports there is."

The attack runs through the 5-foot-6-inch duo with their speed and dribbling ability.

"I feel like everything we're doing, we're doing for the team. We're playing selflessly, more than last year for sure," said junior goalkeeper Wender De Abreu Moura, "and then the guys feed off that emotion."

Malden had its 4-0 start derailed with a 2-0 Greater Boston League setback Wednesday to Everett. The Tornados were back on the field Tuesday vs. Medford.

"We just got it in our minds that we had to get it all back right away," said Smith. "[When] we play league games, the kids all know each other, so that brings an extra level of passion and energy to it since they're all friends off the field, too."

It's no secret how competitive the Greater Boston League is; teams near the bottom regularly hold their own, especially in the playoffs.

"On the state level, we've been hurting ourselves because we just keep beating each other up," said Smith. "So no one rises to the top, so we're all low seeds near .500 [records] entering the tournament."

The schedule will not get any easier, but the players have bought in on making a commitment. Season after season has ended in disappointment. But the upperclassmen know that this is their last chance at a tournament run.

Schools

FIELD HOCKEY
CAPE & ISLANDS
Dennis-Yarmouth 5.....	Nantucket 0
Nauset 2.....	Martha's Vnyd. 1
MERRIMACK VALLEY
Central Cath. 7.....	Dracut 0
Chelmsford 5.....	Tewksbury 0
Lowell 2.....	Haverhill 0
MID-WACH
N. Middlesex 2.....	Leominster 2
MIDDLESEX
Melrose 2.....	Wilmington 2
PATRIOT
Duxbury 2.....	Hanover 0
Marshfield 7.....	Plymouth South 0
Silver Lake 1.....	Pembroke 0
Whit-Hanson 2.....	Plymouth North 1
PIONEER
Barnstable 3.....	Dartmouth 3
VALLEY LEAGUE
Turners Falls 1.....	Mahar 0
NONLEAGUE
Braintree 6.....	Norwell 3
Brookton 3.....	Southeastern 0
Carver 5.....	Wareham/Mashpee 0
Chasaset 4.....	Seekonk 1
Durfee 2.....	Seekonk 1
E. Longmeadow 5.....	Agawam 0
Greenfield 1.....	Westfield 0
Ipswich 6.....	Danvers 2
Joseph Case 1.....	E. Bridgewater 1
Marlborough 9.....	South High 0
Masconomet 2.....	Manchester 1
Middleboro 3.....	Sturgis East 1
Northbridge 3.....	NDA-Worcester 0
Quabbin 5.....	Narragansett 0
Quabog 3.....	Blackstone-Millville 1
Revere 2.....	Gr. Lowell 2
Rockport 5.....	Everett 0
Shepherd Hill 1.....	Bay Pt./Prouty 0
Walpole 2.....	Bp. Fishan 1
Westport 1.....	Old Rochester 0

GOLF
BOYS
BI-COUNTY
Pioneer Valley 187.....	Mohawk Trail 189
St. Mary (W) 201.....	Springfield C. 211
Westfield Tech 168.....	Turners Falls 180
CAPE & ISLANDS
Nantucket 272.....	St. John Paul II 276
Nauset 240.....	Monomoy 259
CATHOLIC CENTRAL
St. Mary's 159.....	Card. Spellman 90
CMAC
AMSA 156.....	Blackstone Valley 163
Bay Path 161.....	Uxbridge 187
Sutton 162.....	Millbury 185
HOCKOMOCK
Mansfield 148.....	Foxboro 153
PATRIOT
Hanover 239.....	Silver Lake 256
Hingham 252.....	Quincy 280
N. Quincy 235.....	Quincy 280
Plymouth North 238.....	Plymouth S. 244
Whit-Hanson 232.....	Pembroke 239
SOUTH COAST
Bourne 275.....	Digh-Rehoboth 293
SUBURBAN
Ware 198.....	Chicopee 205
NONLEAGUE
Auburn 158.....	Whit. Christian 169
Douglas 177.....	Tahanto 195
Franklin City Tech 171.....	Attitash 215
Hopkins 205.....	S. Hadley 178
Lowell 155.....	Tyngsboro 172
Ludlow 149.....	Amherst-Pelham 181
Quabbin 187.....	Marblehead 182
Old Rochester 218.....	Bp. Stang 120
Quabbin 180.....	Quabog 156
Rockland 117.....	Brookton 63
Rockport 292.....	Winthrop 423
Saunders 13.....	Marblehead 182
Saugus 41.....	Lynn English 30
Smith Voc. 163.....	McCann Tech 167
Somerset Berk. 275.....	New Bedford 336
Winchester 43.....	Wilmington 29

SOCCER
BOYS
BI-COUNTY
Gateway 1.....	Drury 0
BOSTON CITY
Boston Int'l. 4.....	Brighton 2
Dearbon STEM 1.....	E. Boston 1
Leatin Acad. 8.....	TechBoston 1
CATHOLIC CENTRAL
Abp. Williams 3.....	Bp. Stang 2
Bp. Feenhan 6.....	Card. Spellman 0
CHARTER SCHOOL ATHLETIC
Excel Acad. 10.....	Boston Collegiate 0
CHURCHILL
Agawam 3.....	Minnechaug 0
CMAC
Bay Path 4.....	Whit. Christian 1
David Prouty 8.....	Bartlett 4
Quincy 2.....	Worcester South 3
St. Paul 11.....	Southbridge 0
Tantasqua 4.....	Blackstone Valley 2
COMMONWEALTH
Gr. Lowell 4.....	Shawsheen 0
MIDDLESEX
Wilmington 3.....	Burlington 0
NORTHEASTERN
Gloucester 2.....	Salem 1
Masconomet 7.....	Palmer 0
Winthrop 3.....	Saugus 2
SMITH
Pope Francis 3.....	Ludlow 2
W. Springfield 1.....	E. Longmeadow 0
SOUTH COAST
Fairhaven 5.....	Old Rochester 1
Gr. New Bedford 3.....	Apponequet 1
Joseph Case 3.....	Seekonk 0
NONLEAGUE
Assabet 6.....	Worcester Tech 2
Bristol Aggie 3.....	Argosy Collegiate 2
Burncoat 3.....	W. Boylston 2
Card. Memorial 4.....	Watertown 0
Doherty 2.....	Fitchburg 0
Douglas 3.....	University Park 0
Hopedale 1.....	Sutton 1
Malden Cath. 3.....	Gr. Lawrence 0
Melrose 3.....	Clinton 0
Monomoy 2.....	Albion 0
Neighborhood 5.....	New Miss'n/English 1
Norton 8.....	Foxboro Charter 1
Springfield Central 4.....	Easthampton 0

GLOBE TOP 20
No.	Rec.	Last
1.	Oliver Ames	5-0 1
2.	Concord-Carlisle	4-0-1 2
3.	St. John's (S)	4-0-2 4
4.	BC High	4-0-1 5
5.	Medfield	3-0 6
6.	Wayland	5-0 8
7.	Newton South	3-2 15
8.	St. John's Prep	1-1-1 3
9.	Cambridge	1-0-3 12
10.	Duxbury	2-1 10
11.	Brookline	3-0-2 11
12.	Needham	1-1-2 7
13.	Natick	1-3-1 9
14.	New Bedford	3-0-2 16
15.	Framingham	2-1-2 13
16.	Norwell	4-0 17
17.	Marshfield	4-0-1 -
18.	Belmont	4-0-1 -
19.	Winchester	2-0 19
20.	Arlington	1-0-1 18

"It's been our goal since the start of the season. Go as far as we can. Win the cup," said Kalefa.

Corner kicks

■ Saturday marks the 20th year of Kicks for Cancer, hosted at Concord-Carlisle to honor Lois Wells, the mother of C-C goalie coach Steve Wells.

Started by longtime Patriots coach Ray Pavlik in 2007, this year's schedule is packed. Perennial Division 1 powers Needham and St. John's Prep kick off at 10 a.m., Arlington and Reading have a big Middlesex League bout at 12:15, 2024 Division 1 state champ Newton North and Brookline face off at 2:30, Newton South and Cambridge have a heavyweight bout at 4:15, and the host Patriots face rival Lincoln-Sudbury under the lights at 7 p.m.

For the full schedule and more information, visit kicksforcancer.org.

■ Chelmsford coach Christian Matamoros earned his first career win in charge of the Lions with Tuesday's 2-0 victory over Haverhill. Matamoros is a former stand-out at Tewksbury.

Games to watch

■ Tuesday, Lynnfield at Hamilton-Wenham, 4 p.m. — Two of the Cape Ann League's best face off for an important clash.

■ Tuesday, New Bedford at Dartmouth, 4 p.m. — Both the Whalers and the Indians are on the rise, and they'll put unbeaten starts on the line in this nonleague game.

■ Wednesday, Wakefield at Belmont, 4:30 p.m. — It'll be a good Middlesex League test when these two meet; the Marauders are out to a 4-0-1 start.

■ Thursday, Brookline at Framingham, 4 p.m. — A great Bay State Conference matchup pits the perennial contender Flyers against the Warriors, building off a great 2025 season and strong start to 2026.

■ Saturday, Kicks for Cancer, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. — There's a good matchup on at any time of the day at Concord-Carlisle, with nine boys games on tap.

Correspondent Mike Puzanghera contributed to this story. Alex Yu can be reached at alex.yu@globe.com.

College polls

FOOTBALL
AP Top 25 poll
The poll as of Sept. 20, with first-place votes in parentheses, records, total points based on 25 points for a first-place vote through 1 point for 25th, and last week's ranking:
	Rec.	Pts. LW
1. Texas (58).....	3-0	1,706 1
2. Georgia (3).....	3-0	1,580 2
3. Notre Dame.....	3-0	1,517 3
4. Mississippi (3).....	3-0	1,488 4
5. Indiana (4).....	3-0	1,467 4
6. Miami (1).....	3-0	1,445 5
7. Ohio State.....	2-1	1,415 6
8. Alabama.....	3-0	1,182 10
9. BYU.....	3-0	1,090 11
10. LSU.....	2-1	1,078 7
11. Texas Tech.....	3	1,067 13
12. USC.....	4-0	907 12
13. Penn State.....	3-0	850 14
14. Tennessee.....	3-0	826 15
15. Utah.....	3-0	752 17
16. Louisville.....	2-1	667 23
17. Iowa.....	3-0	661 18
18. Michigan.....	3-0	432 19
19. Missouri.....	3-0	369 20
20. Oregon.....	2-1	364 21
21. Florida.....	3-0	269 27
22. SMU.....	2-1	212 16
23. Texas A&M.....	2-1	202 9
24. Mississippi St.....	3-0	179 32
25. Houston.....	2-1	127 22

Also receiving votes: Washington 107, Kentucky 98, West Virginia 93, Oklahoma 91, Oklahoma St. 50, Boise St. 48, Virginia Tech 46, W. Michigan 27, Duke 20, Tulsa 18, Arizona 12, Pittsburgh 10, UCLA 10, James Madison 7, North Dakota St. 6, Kansas St. 3, Nebraska 2

FBS Coaches poll

The poll as of Sept. 20, with first-place votes in parentheses, records, total points based on 25 points for a first-place vote through 1 point for 25th, and last week's ranking:
	Rec.	Pts. LW
1. Texas (46).....	3-0	1,807 1
2. Georgia (16).....	3-0	1,742 2
3. Notre Dame (2).....	3-0	1,636 3
4. Indiana (9).....	3-0	1,613 4
5. Miami (1).....	3-0	1,552 5
6. Mississippi.....	3-0	1,501 9
7. Ohio State.....	2-1	1,473 6
8. Alabama.....	3-0	1,309 10
9. BYU.....	3-0	1,089 13
10. Texas Tech.....	3-0	1,079 13
11. LSU.....	2-1	1,067 7
12. USC.....	4-0	1,057 11
13. Tennessee.....	3-0	833 14
14. Penn State.....	3-0	814 15
15. Utah.....	3-0	743 17
16. Oregon.....	2-1	594 18
17. Iowa.....	3-0	580 20
18. Michigan.....	3-0	545 19
19. Louisville.....	2-1	519 27
20. Texas A&M.....	2-1	447 8
21. Missouri.....	3-0	382 22
22. Florida.....	3-0	370 26
23. Washington.....	3-0	251 24
24. Oklahoma.....	2-1	213 21
25. SMU.....	2-1	162 16

Also receiving votes: Houston 116, Mississippi St. 114, Duke 70, West Virginia 55, Kentucky 43, Oklahoma St. 36, Pittsburgh 35, Virginia Tech 30, Vanderbilt 29, Boise St. 29, Tulsa 20, Kansas St. 18, UCLA 18, W. Michigan 17, Nebraska 11, North Dakota St. 8, North-western 4, Clemson 3, UMass 2, James Madison 2, Arizona 1

STATS/TSN poll

The poll as of Sept. 21, with first-place votes in parentheses, records, total points based on 25 points for a first-place vote through 1 point for 25th, and last week's ranking:
	Rec.	Pts. LW
1. Montana St. (46).....	4-0	1,414 1
2. South Dakota St.....	3-1	1,363 2
(10) Colgate.....	3-1	995 28
3. Illinois St. (1).....	4-0	1,261 5
4. Tarleton St. (1).....	4-0	1,254 4
5. Montana.....	3-1	1,204 3
6. Lehigh.....	4-0	1,042 7
7. North Dakota.....	3-1	1,041 4
8. South Dakota.....	3-1	987 6
9. Stephen F. Austin.....	4-0	965 12
10. UC Davis.....	3-1	919 11
11. Youngstown St.....	2-2	853 9
12. Tennessee Tech.....	3-1	842 12
13. Austin Peay.....	3-1	769 14
14. Idaho St.....	3-0	671 16
15. Lamar.....	2-1	627 14
16. South Carolina St.....	4-0	550 18
17. Yale.....	4-1	448 28
18. No. Arizona.....	3-1	437 20
19. URI.....	2-2	390 8
20. West Florida.....	2-1	260 17
21. Harvard.....	1-0	248 25
22. Campbell.....	2-1	235 28
23. Villanova.....	2-2	169 22
24. So. Illinois.....	2-2	116 24
25. Mercer.....	2-2	102 23

Also receiving votes: Alabama St. 72, Jackson St. 60, Colgate 48, Richmond 44, Elon 35, Stony Brook 29, Furman 19, William & Mary 16, SE Louisiana 14, UIW 14, Monmouth 9, Houston Christian 9, Morgan St. 5, SE Missouri St. 4

FCS Coaches poll

The poll as of Sept. 21, with first-place votes in parentheses, records, total points based on 25 points for a first-place vote through 1 point for 25th, and last week's ranking:
	Rec.	Pts. LW
1. Montana St. (25).....	4-0	649 1
2. South Dakota St.....	3-1	598 3
3. Tarleton St.....	4-0	566 2
4. Montana.....	3-1	561 5
4. Illinois St. (1).....	4-0	561 4
6. Stephen F. Austin.....	4-0	480 8
7. Lehigh.....	4-0	461 7
8. North Dakota.....	3-1	459 6
9. UC Davis.....	3-1	419 11
10. Tennessee Tech.....	3-0	415 10
11. Austin Peay.....	3-1	378 14
12. South Dakota.....	3-1	366 12
13. Youngstown St.....	2-2	363 9
14. South Carolina St.....	4-0	103 16
15. Lamar.....	2-1	296 15
16. Idaho St.....	3-0	273 18
17. No. Arizona.....	3-1	228 19
18. Yale.....	4-1	188 20
19. Richmond.....	3-1	104 26
20. West Florida.....	2-1	97 17
21. URI.....	2-2	93 13
22. Villanova.....	2-2	85 23
23. Colgate.....	2-1	71 28
23. Mercer.....	2-2	71 22
25. Harvard.....	1-0	50 32

Also receiving votes: So. Illinois 45, Campbell 41, Jackson St. 39, Elon 38, Furman 37, Alabama St. 14, Stony Brook 12, Prairie View A&M 12, Bryant 7, William & Mary 6, Central Conn. S. 6, UIW 6, Dartmouth 6, Albion Christian 5, Monmouth 5, SE Louisiana 4, SE Missouri St. 3, UT Rio Grande Valley 3, San Diego 2, Robt. Morris 2, St. Thomas (Minn.) 1, Chattanooga 1

Higher ed is at a turning point.

Make sense of it with College Town, our new weekly newsletter.

From AI and enrollment declines to funding cuts and falling public trust, we’re unpacking what’s changing and what comes next.

Sign up for free at Globe.com/collegetown

College Town

Remembered

SHARE YOUR MEMORIES ON OUR GUEST BOOK AT BOSTON.COM/OBITUARIES

BY CITY AND TOWN

AUBURNDALE WILSON, Arnold	DEDHAM JOYCE, Edward P. Jr.	MEDFORD DiGIORGIO, Ida T.	NORWOOD JOYCE, Edward P. Jr.	SOMERVILLE LABADINI, Carolyn G. (Luciano)	WEST ROXBURY JOYCE, Edward P. Jr.	OUT OF STATE
BOSTON GENS, Marie Madeleine	HINGHAM DUGGAN, Robert Francis	LABADINI , Carolyn G. (Luciano)	PEABODY JOYCE, Edward P. Jr.	WATERTOWN JOYCE, Edward P. Jr.	WEYMOUTH DUGGAN, Robert Francis	CONNECTICUT
BROOKLINE DUGGAN, Robert Francis	LEYDEN GENS, Marie Madeleine	MILTON DOWNES, Maureen B. (Mullaly)	QUINCY DUGGAN, Robert Francis	WAYLAND HYLAND, Ann Marie (Leahy)	WOBURN DiGIORGIO, Ida T.	GENS, Marie Madeleine
MASTERMAN , Edward I.	MARTHA'S VINEYARD GENS, Marie Madeleine	NATICK HYLAND, Ann Marie (Leahy)	SHERBORN HYLAND, Ann Marie (Leahy)	WELLESLEY HYLAND, Ann Marie (Leahy)	WOLLASTON DUGGAN, Robert Francis
CENTERVILLE HYLAND, Ann Marie (Leahy)		NORTH READING DiGIORGIO, Ida T.

WILSON, Arnold

ARNOLD BURTON WILSON

September 23, 1930 – September 19, 2026

Arnold Burton Wilson(Yitzchak Beryl), of Auburndale, Massachusetts, died at home, on September 19, 2026, four days shy of his 96th birthday.

Born in Boston, on September 23, 1930, to Ethel and David Wilson, Arnold attended Boston Latin School and Boston University, where he participated in ROTC. During the Korean War era, he served in the U.S. Army, in Germany, as a radio man and First Lieutenant.

Arnold married Suzanne Wilker on June 28, 1952. They shared 74 years of marriage and raised seven children in the Newton home that would remain Arnold's home for nearly 70 years.

Arnold spent much of his working life in two family businesses, Microwire and Goddess Bra. Exceptionally resourceful and happiest figuring out how to do things himself, he painted his house, tackled its interior projects, and even laid the concrete and tile in the backyard.

That same determination characterized his devotion to his children. When they studied music at the Juilliard School's Pre-College Division, Arnold made the Saturday drive from Newton to New York City week after week so they could attend.

Arnold had a mischievous sense of humor and left his family with decades of stories. During his Army service, after breaking his leg in a bivouac and finding himself immobilized in a cast, Suzanne called to tell him she was going into labor with their son, Ian. Arnold's response was, "Should I boil the water?"

Years later, on a trip to Italy's Amalfi Coast, he delighted in going to the market each day simply to order his sparkling water in Italian: acqua con gas. At home, practical jokes were part of family life, often elaborate enough to leave his children laughing, and occasionally exasperated.

Arnold possessed remarkable tenacity. In retirement, he routinely walked miles each day and remained physically active. He suffered his stroke while working out at the gym. Afterward, he pursued rehabilitation with the same determination, continuing physical therapy through the day before his death.

As his health declined, his son, Evan cared for him at home, allowing Arnold to remain in the house that had been at the center of his family's life for nearly seven decades. Their humor continued even through hospice. The last thing Evan said to him was, "No matter what they say about you, Pop, you were the best father a kid could have ever had."

Arnold chuckled.

Arnold is survived by his beloved wife, Suzanne (née Wilker) Wilson; his brothers, Len Wilson of Great Neck and Norman Wilson of Portland, Maine; his children, Ian, Jeffrey, Rebecca, Elizabeth, Evan, Charlton, and Gabriel; his grandchildren, Melissa, Rachel, Jason, Jami, Devan, Ethan, Peyton, and Yuki; and his great-grandchildren, Cameron, Ryan, Lincoln, and Quincy.

He will be remembered for his ingenuity, tenacity, devotion to his family, and a sense of humor that remained with him to the end.

Funeral Services will be held Tuesday, September 22, 2026, at Temple Reyim in Newton, Massachusetts. Time to be announced. Arrangements by Brezniaak Funeral Directors, WEST NEWTON.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to the Wounded Warrior Project.

Brezniaak Funeral Directors, West Newton

MASTERMAN, Edward I.

Distinguished Boston Lawyer Who Helped Shape the City's Growth, Dies at 100

Edward I. Masterman, a Boston trial lawyer who became a leading figure in eminent domain and real estate litigation, died of natural causes on Sunday in Boston. He was 100. He enjoyed a long and remarkable life and 73 years of marriage to his wife Sydel.

Ed was born in Boston to Jake and Anne Masterman, one of six children. He served in the Army during World War II and attended Suffolk University and Suffolk University Law School on the G.I. Bill, earning his law degree in 1950. Suffolk awarded him an honorary Doctor of Laws degree in 1990.

He founded the firm that became Masterman, Culbert & Tully, a boutique real estate and corporate practice. As Boston expanded and public authorities took private property for highways, transit and urban renewal, Ed Masterman built a reputation as one of the bar's dominant and sought after litigators in eminent domain.

He served as president of the Boston Bar Association and was elected a Fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers.

Edward's civic life ran nearly as long as his legal one. He joined the Boston University Board of Trustees in 1982 and served as chairman of its Trustee Development Committee from 1990 to 2002, later becoming a Trustee Emeritus. On Nov. 12, 2002, the university dedicated the Edward I. and Sydel Masterman Hall, La Maison Française, at 153 Bay State Road.

At his law school, he and Sydel endowed the Masterman Institute and Speaker Series on the First Amendment and the Fourth Estate. The series has drawn journalists, judges and media lawyers to Suffolk for decades.

Edward Masterman served as Austria's Honorary Consul General in Boston for 18 years, resigning in 1986 in protest over political developments in that country. He also served as a Civilian Aide to the Secretary of the Army, was on the Board of Directors of the Boston Foundation, was active in the New England Legal Foundation, Jewish Big Brother, the New Boston Committee, and numerous other legal, civic, and charitable organizations.

Within his family, Ed was an inveterate storyteller, and held the attention of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren with accounts of a long life. In addition to his wife Sydel, he is survived his sister Rochelle Weil, by three children and their spouses: James Masterman and his wife, Dr. Andrea Masterman; Beth Masterman and her husband, Martin Pentz; and Gwenn Masterman Snider and her husband, Mark; nine grandchildren; and 15 great-grandchildren.

A funeral service will be held at Temple Israel of Boston, 477 Longwood Ave, Boston, on Wednesday, September 23, at 11:00 am, followed by the interment at Sharon Memorial Park, 40 Dedham Street, Sharon. Please call Levine Chapels for shiva details. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to The Boston Foundation at www.tbfo.org or the Combined Jewish Philanthropies at cjp.org.

Livestream Link: <https://tinyurl.com/EdwardMasterman>

Levine Chapels, Brookline
617-277-8300
www.levinechapels.com

DiGIORGIO, Ida T. "Edie" (Occhiolini)

Age 82, passed away, with her family by her side, September 21, 2026. Beloved wife of the late Robert J. DiGiorgio. She was born in Boston, MA, lived in North Reading, MA, Cape Neddick, ME, and Marco Island, FL. Edie was a devoted mother and wife. She is survived by her devoted children, two sons, Robert and Michael DiGiorgio; and daughter, Carla Baker; their spouses, Andrew Alexander, Jessica DiGiorgio, John Baker; and three loving grandchildren, Amelia, Madeline and Charlotte. Sister of the late Anthony Occhiolini. Edie is further survived by her loving niece, Teresa Occhiolini and her husband, Ulisse; niece, Stella; and nephew, Piero. Family and friends are respectfully invited to attend Visiting Hours on Friday morning, September 25, at the McLaughlin - Dello Russo Family Funeral Home, 60 Pleasant St., WOBURN, from 9 a.m. to 10:30 a.m., followed by a Funeral Mass celebrated at St. Raphael Church, 512 High St., Medford, at 11 a.m. Services will conclude with private Burial at Oak Grove Cemetery, Medford. To leave an online message of condolence, please visit www.dellorusso.net.

Dello Russo Family Funeral Homes
Woburn - Medford

DOWNES, Maureen B. (Mullaly)

Of Milton, MA, died on Thursday, September 17, 2026, at age 99.

Born in Manhattan, to Mary (Moran) and John Mullaly, Maureen was a consummate city girl, who once worked as a secretary in the Empire State Building. In 1950, when she married Thomas Francis Downes, they lit a flame whose light would burn for generations. Their loving marriage of 68 years produced 11 children, 33 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren, along with generations to come.

In the early years of their marriage, Maureen and Tom stayed in "the neighborhood," of mid-town Manhattan, later moving to Queens, Princeton, NJ, and ultimately settling in Milton, in 1963. Maureen was an active parishioner at St. Agatha's church, where she proudly attended dozens of her children and grandchildren's First Holy Communions, graduations, confirmations and marriages. She was fortunate to have many close friends from St. Agatha's, along with many of the families from Governors Road and adjacent neighborhoods.

Maureen's personality was built on strength, resilience, humor, and indomitable spirit and an infinite supply of love. Their home of more than 60 years on Governors Road was legendary in the neighborhood for its backyard, which hosted a constant stream of children and teenagers. Maureen presided over the home with the perfect combination of discipline and mischief, which she would dole out freely to all who visited.

Maureen leaves her 11 children: Mary Falwell of Bluffton, SC and Chatham, Stephen and Ann (O'Hara) of Milton, Regis and Shelley (Murphy) of Weymouth, Michael and Cathryn (Macdonald) of Easton, Lorraine and Hank McCartin of Providence, RI, Maureen and David Jeffery of Easton, Justine and Jim Murphy of Bridgewater, Richard of Milton, Tara and Walter O'Leary of Milton, Deirdre and Mark Morris of Edgartown, Moira Downes and James McLaughlin of South Boston. She was the proud grandmother of 33 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren.

A Wake will be held at Dolan Funeral Home, 460 Granite Avenue, EAST MILTON SQUARE, on Wednesday, September 23, from 5-8pm. A Mass of Christian Burial will be held at St. Agatha Church, 432 Adams Street, Milton, on Thursday, September 24, at 10:30 am. Burial at Arlington National Cemetery will be held at a later date.

For complete obituary, www.dolanfuneral.com

DUGGAN, Robert Francis "Bob"

Age 90, of Weymouth, formerly of Quincy, died peacefully, September 18, 2026, at the South Shore Hospital, Weymouth.

Born in Boston, on February 26, 1936, son of the late Henry and Lucy (Battles) Duggan. Husband of Marianne E. (Abern) Duggan of Weymouth and the late Mary E. (Logue) Duggan, who died in 2022. Father of Robert F. Duggan, Jr. of Brookline and Kevin M. Duggan and his wife, Cristina of Hingham. Stepfather of Ellen Murphy of Dennis. Grandfather of Leila and Jack Duggan, both of Hingham. Step-grandfather of Lindsey George and her husband, Adam of Rockland and Jessica Barrus of Weymouth. Step-great-grandfather of Audrey George of Rockland. Brother of the late Marie Keefe and Harry Duggan and his surviving wife, Pat of Quincy. Also survived by many nieces and nephews.

Relatives and friends are respectfully invited to greet the family during the Visiting Hours on Thursday, September 24, 2026, from 4-7 PM, in the McDonald Keohane Funeral Home, SOUTH WEYMOUTH, at 809 Main Street (Route 18, opposite of South Shore Hospital).

A Celebration of Life Service will be held in the funeral home, at 9:30 AM, on Friday, September 25, 2026, prior to the Funeral Mass in Sacred Heart Church, Weymouth, at 10:30 AM.

Services conclude with interment and Army Military Honors in Old North Cemetery, Weymouth.

In lieu of flowers, donations in Bob's name may be sent to the charitable organization of one's choice.

See complete obituary, at www.Keohane.com

Life Book memoirs

No one tells your stories like you do

Capture them in a book for your loved ones, with the help of LifeBook Memoirs—the world's leading private memoir service. We've helped thousands of people capture their stories in beautifully written handcrafted books. Now is the time to tell your story.

Find out how—call us on 1-844-940-2719
lifebookmemoirs.com

Share a cherished memory

View The Boston Globe's complete list of death notices and share your condolences in the guestbook at boston.com/obituaries.

Remembered

SHARE YOUR MEMORIES ON OUR GUEST BOOK AT BOSTON.COM/OBITUARIES

GENS, Marie Madeleine

Of Leyden, Massachusetts, died peacefully at home, on September 11, 2026, surrounded by her family and looking out over the fields and barns she loved so dearly. She was 79. Madeleine was born in New York City, on February 27, 1947, to Gerard Fox and Suzanne Hertzmann. As a small child, she and her brother, John, were taken to live in Lourmarin, a village in the south of France. At the age of seven, she returned to the United States and was raised in Meriden, Connecticut, where she made the friends who would stay with her for the rest of her life, right up to her final days.

Madeleine never stopped learning. Though she did not finish a formal degree, she took courses all her life, driven by a curiosity that never quieted, and a summer at the Rhode Island School of Design brought her artistic gifts fully into focus. Over the years, she was a model, a movie theater manager, a stained glass designer, a framer, a saleswoman, a tofu cookbook author, a chef, a caterer, an antique dealer, a landscape designer and an interior designer. Each was its own era, and she excelled at every one of them. She met the love of her life, Tim Gens, on the dance floor of the Hot Tin Roof on Martha's Vineyard. They married in June of 1984 and raised their family in the Boston area, over 34 years together. After Tim's passing in 2018, Madeleine found her way back to Western Massachusetts, to the community in the Valley she had first found in her twenties, the place that had always let her feel like her most authentic self. She settled into a farmhouse in Leyden, that she always said was Tim's last gift to her, a soft place to land after the heartbreak of losing him.

In Leyden, she built the life she had always wanted. Her days were full of gardening, swimming with friends, tai chi, print-making, and canning jars of the most delicious jams, salsas and chutneys anyone had ever tasted. She served with the Council on Aging, preparing monthly luncheons for her neighbors, and helped bring performances and lectures to town through the Leyden Cultural Council. Madeleine was not one to sit still, and her goal every single day was to bring a little more beauty and a little more love into the world. For all her talents, her greatest gift was giving. She shared the food she spent hours preparing, shared her deep knowledge of art and design, and above all, shared herself. She started a meal train for families in crisis, showed up at rallies to speak against injustice, and opened her doors to anyone who needed support or a place to call home. Her invitation never had an end date. You could stay until you were back on your feet, and many did. She had only been in Leyden a handful of years, but the town took her in from the start, and the friends and neighbors who surrounded her in her final weeks showed her extraordinary love, compassion and generosity. Her family will always be grateful to this community for the kindness they showed their mother.

Madeleine is survived by her three children, Jamie Langley, Kathleen Gens and Dylan Gens; their spouses, Merrill Langley, Will Fowkes and Hannah Gens; her beloved grandchildren, Catherine, Merrill Jr., Charlie and Clementine; her dear nephew, Todd Pavelkops; and Elizabeth Diebold, who came into her life as a friend and stayed as a daughter. She was predeceased by her husband, Tim; and her brother, John Michael Fox. At Madeleine's request, there will be no formal Funeral. A Celebration of her Life will be held at her home, in Leyden, at a later date. In lieu of flowers, the family asks that donations be made in her memory to The Literacy Project or the Wounded Warrior Project.

Funeral Services

ST. MICHAEL CEMETERY & CREMATORY

500 Canterbury St.
Boston, MA 02131

The Respectful Way™
617-524-1036

www.stmichaelcemetery.com

Funeral Services

CANNIFF MONUMENT
(617) 323-3690

800-439-3690 • 617-876-9110

531 Cummings Highway, Roslindale
583 Mt. Auburn Street, Cambridge

MON-FRI 9-9; SAT 9-5, SUNDAY 12-5

HYLAND, Ann Marie (Leahy)

Passed away peacefully, surrounded by her loving family, on September 16, 2026. She was born to John J. Leahy, Sr. and Grace K. (Sweeney) Leahy of Medford, MA, where she grew up. She graduated from Girls Catholic High School and the University of Massachusetts, Lowell. She spent many years as an elementary school teacher before she was married, in 1964, to Albert L. Hyland, Jr. She was predeceased by her husband, Albert, of 61 years (2025). She leaves behind their four daughters, Ann Whitlock and her husband, Peter, Amy Munchak and her husband, Anthony, Jeanne Hicks and her husband, Jason, and Christine Phillips and her husband, Jay; and by her nine grandchildren, Finley, Thomas, Anna, Emily, Caitlin, Grace, Aidan, Matthew and Timothy, in whom she took great joy. She was also predeceased by her brother, John J. Leahy, Jr.; and her nephew, John J. Leahy, III.

She was an active parishioner of St. Ann Catholic Church, in Wayland, for 58 years, enjoyed tennis, golf, gardening, reading and found great joy in all things concerning her children and grandchildren.

Visiting Hours will be held at John C. Bryant Funeral Home, 56 Pemberton Rd. (off Rte. 30), in WAYLAND, on Thursday, September 24, from 5:30 - 7:30 PM. Her Funeral Mass will take place at St. Ann Catholic Church (Good Shepherd Parish), 124 Cochituate Road (Route 27), Wayland, on September 25, at 10:30 AM. Private Burial to follow in North Cemetery, Wayland.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests that you consider a donation to Good Shepherd Hospice, at <https://gscommunitycare.org/>

For condolences and directions, please visit www.johncbryantfuneralhome.com

JOYCE, Edward P. “Paul” Jr.

 Of Dedham, formerly of Watertown, passed away, on September 19, 2026. Husband of the late Carole A. (Buscone). Beloved father of Michael E. and his fiancée, Kim of Peabody, John S. and his wife, Jill of Norwood, and Julia M. Hall of Burlington, NJ. Devoted son of the late Edward Paul Joyce, Sr. and Cecilia Julia (Supple). Paul was predeceased by his brothers, Thomas V. Joyce and Phillip J. Joyce; his sisters, Nancy P. Fitzgerald and Mary J. Wilson; his son-in-law, Wayne T. Hall; and his grandson, Kevin P. Joyce. Paul is also survived by his sister, Gloria C. Joyce of Brighton; his brother Richard T. Joyce of Falmouth; his grandsons, Joseph M. Joyce and his fiancée, Sandra of Malden and Christopher J. Joyce of Malden; his great-granddaughters, Juliana M. Joyce and Adelyn A. Joyce of Malden; and by many nieces, nephews and cousins. Paul is also survived by his dear friend, Helen Nehiley of Dedham. The Joyce family would like to thank Traditions of Dedham, Bridges by Epoch, and Caring Hospice for all their loving care and support for Paul over the years. Visiting Hours will be held at the William J. Gormley Funeral Home, 2055 Centre Street, WEST ROXBURY, MA, on Thursday, September 24, from 4:00pm to 7:00pm. Burial will be held privately by the family, and a Celebration of Life will be held at a later date. In lieu of flowers, memorial donations may be made to the Disabled American Veterans, at dav.org or the charity of your choice. To read full obituary, please visit gormleyfuneral.com

William J. Gormley Funeral Service
617-323-8600

LABADINI, Carolyn G. (Luciano)

Originally of Medford, passed away peacefully, on September 16, 2026, at the age of 100. Carolyn was the wife of the late John A. Labadini. She was predeceased by her husband, John; her siblings, Charles Luciano, John Luciano and Benjamin Caggiano; her daughter-in-law, Margo Labadini; and her grandson, Michael Settemio. She is survived by her daughter, Jayne Fiore and her husband; her son, Robert Labadini; her grandchildren, Aviana Fiore and John Settemio; and numerous nieces and nephews. Relatives and friends may Visit with Carolyn's family on Wednesday, September 30, from 4 to 8 PM, at the Dello Russo Funeral Home, 306 Main St., MEDFORD, and again on Thursday, October 1, at 9 AM, followed by a Mass in St. Joseph Church, 118 High St., Medford, at 10 AM. Services will conclude with burial at Oak Grove Cemetery, Medford. To leave a message of condolence please visit www.dellorosso.net

Dello Russo Family Funeral Home
Medford-Woburn

MASTERMAN, Edward I.

See Enhanced Listing

WILSON, Arnold

See Enhanced Listing

Announcements

PIPEFITTERS' LOCAL UNION 537

We regret to announce the death of Brother William J. Wedgwood, who passed away on September 16, 2026.

Services will be private.

Daniel T. O'Brien, Business Manager/FST
Henry V. DiNino, President

The celebration of a life starts here.

You talk about many things with your loved ones: from day-to-day details to big events. Sharing stories with those who matter most isn't just important today; it will be especially significant when it's time to honor and commemorate your lives.

Memorialization at the end of life is more than it used to be. It can reflect a person's life story and be transformative, healing and comforting.

Meaningful memorialization starts when loved ones talk about what matters most: memories made, lessons learned and how they hope to be remembered.

Download a free brochure and Have the Talk of a Lifetime today. It can make the difference of a lifetime.

talkofalifetime.org

Massachusetts Funeral

Directors Association

Obituaries

Ernie Accorsi, longtime NFL executive, at 84

By Stephen Whyno
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Longtime NFL executive Ernie Accorsi, who built the New York Giants core that won the Super Bowl twice after his retirement, has died. He was 84.

The Giants and Mr. Accorsi’s family announced Sunday that he died Saturday. A cause and place of death were not provided.

Mr. Accorsi was general manager of the Giants from 1998-2006 and received championship rings from their title runs in the ’07 and ’11 seasons. He also became the second GM enshrined in the franchise’s ring of honor.

“Ernie helped shape the course of New York Giants history through his vision, leadership and unwavering belief in building a championship organization,” owner John Mara said in a statement. “Beyond his accomplishments as a football executive, he was a trusted adviser and dear friend. His legacy will forever be part of the Giants, and he will be greatly missed.”

Mr. Accorsi was in charge

BARTON SILVERMAN/THE NEW YORK TIMES/FILE 2001

Mr. Accorsi drafted John Elway, Bernie Kosar, and Eli Manning as a general manager for three NFL teams.

when New York hired Tom Coughlin as coach and traded for quarterback Eli Manning after the Chargers took him with the first pick in the 2004 draft. The Giants made the playoffs four out of six seasons from ’05-11.

“I call Ernie every draft week for the last 12 years, maybe longer than that, and just thank him for making the trade and believing in me and bringing me to the New York Giants,” Manning said in a statement. “I know he was the believer in me and kind of the reason I got here. I appreciated him so much for building such great teams and giving us the opportunity to win some championships here.”

Mr. Accorsi, a native of Hershey, Pa., got a communications degree from Wake Forest, served in the US Army, and was a sportswriter before working in public relations at Penn State and for the Baltimore Colts. He spent time at the league office before rejoining the Colts as assistant general manager.

“Ernie Accorsi was one of the most respected football minds in NFL history and a dear friend whose wisdom and perspective I valued tremendously,” Commissioner Roger Goodell said in a statement. “Throughout his remarkable career, he shaped championship-caliber clubs and earned the admiration of everyone who worked with him.”

Mr. Accorsi was promoted to Baltimore’s GM in 1982, then served in that role with the Cleveland Browns from 1985-92 before going to the Giants. They won two NFC East titles during his tenure with them before breaking through with Manning, Amani Toomer, Antonio Pierce, and Michael Strahan.

“Ernie was very decisive, very opinionated,” Coughlin said in a statement. “He loved to laugh... He loved to have an audience and laugh, and then everyone else would laugh with him.”

EVAN AGOSTINI/ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE 2019

Mr. Gerber, the son of model Cindy Crawford, spoke openly about his struggles with substance abuse and mental health.

Presley Gerber, followed mother’s path as model; 27

By Leo Sands
NEW YORK TIMES

Presley Gerber, the son of supermodel Cindy Crawford who as a teenager forged a promising modeling career of his own and later spoke openly about his struggles with substance abuse and mental health, died Sunday in Los Angeles. He was 27.

Mr. Gerber died at a rehab facility, according to records from the Los Angeles County medical examiner’s office. The records did not list a cause, and a spokesperson for the family did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

In the mid-2010s, as the fashion industry developed a sudden obsession with the children of models from the ’90s and early aughts, Mr. Gerber gained the attention of major brands looking to cash in on a generation of stars who had retired but still had name recognition.

Mr. Gerber — a child of Crawford, one of the most recognized American supermodels, and the businessperson Rande Gerber — was 15 when he signed as a model with the management firm IMG, which counts Gigi Hadid and Paloma Elsesser as clients. He made his runway debut with Italian fashion brand Moschino, and by age 17 had appeared in campaigns for brands including Calvin Klein and walked in shows for fashion houses including Dolce & Gabbana.

In 2018, he starred in a Pepsi advertisement that aired during the Super Bowl, a nod to his mother’s memorable 1992 commercial for the soda company.

“I think I just didn’t feel that I had enough experience in the fashion industry before, but now I believe I’m ready,” he told Vogue after a 2016 show for Moschino.

Alongside his younger sister, Kaia Gerber, a model and actor, Mr. Gerber often joined his parents on the red carpet and in ad campaigns. The luxury wristwatch brand Omega featured the four family members as brand ambassadors in 2017.

Presley Gerber was born July 2, 1999, in Brentwood, Calif. His father had built a high-flying career in the nightlife industry with a string of successful bars in the 1990s and later created a tequila brand with actor George Clooney that was acquired for more than $700 million in 2017.

In his youth, Mr. Gerber was an avid athlete who devoted significant time — sometimes as much as 10 hours a day during middle school, he said — to water sports, including swimming, surfing and water polo.

“I can tell you right now, the strongest addiction I ever had was surfing and being in the ocean,” he once said.

As he and his sister began modeling while in high school, they attended classes for just a few hours a day, they said, completing their schooling online while building their careers.

In his late teens and early 20s, Mr. Gerber graced the covers of fashion titles such as GQ and T: The New York Times Style Magazine. But as he gained attention, Mr. Gerber also grappled with mental health issues and substance abuse, a battle he waged for over a decade, according to his own accounts and those of family members.

He spoke publicly about his struggles to adjust to the life of a working model, with extensive travel, long days, and few basic worker protections — realities of the industry that can be hidden behind the lush displays of glamour.

“I remember within the first week of signing, I’m like in New York, people are taking pictures of me, like, shirt off. My whole life changed within a month,” he said in a podcast interview in 2023. “It was a very profound experience, because I had to grow up quickly.”

Mr. Gerber also said that being a working model meant he had less time for rigorous exercise and being outdoors, which contributed to his deteriorating mental health.

“The less activity that was in my life, especially for me in the ocean, the more medication I found having to be integrated into my life,” he said in a post on his Instagram account last year.

On that account in recent years, he began speaking regularly about experiencing depression and described his time at rehabilitation centers in a series he called “Mental Health Mondays.”

In 2022, he was named the face of Celine’s Eau de Californie fragrance. But in the podcast interview the following year, he talked about moving away from modeling, saying he hoped to obtain a real estate license.

In March, Mr. Gerber shared an Instagram post from Mexico detailing his plans to receive a dose of ibogaine, a naturally occurring psychoactive drug that some researchers hope could be used as a treatment for addiction, PTSD, and brain injuries. The mind-altering drug is illegal in the United States but is accessible abroad, including in Mexico.

His father wrote in a comment on that post: “I’m so proud of you and your courage.” His mother called him “a warrior.”

Last month, his sister told Vogue that she was proud of him for openly discussing his struggles. “When something like that happens in a family, it kind of levels everyone,” she said. “There’s only so much you can hide from the world. And trying to put a lid on something just makes the person feel like you’re ashamed of them.”

By Michael S. Rosenwald
NEW YORK TIMES

David George Gordon, a science writer who elevated the culinary profile of insects with “The Eat-a-Bug Cookbook,” a guide to deep-frying tarantulas and sautéing crickets, and with boisterous, squirm-inducing cooking demonstrations on late-night television, died Aug. 4 in Tacoma, Wash. He was 76.

His death, in a hospital, was caused by complications of a fall, his daughter Julia Mullen Gordon said.

Known as the bug chef, Mr. Gordon looked like a young Einstein, with a bushy beard, tousled hair, and round spectacles. To many, he was a figure of considerable oddity.

On “Late Night With Conan O’Brien,” the wisecracking host called Mr. Gordon a “freak” and, for good measure, “a very strange man.” The Seattle Post-Intelligencer declared that “a more bent mind would be hard to find on the Olympic Peninsula.”

In Mr. Gordon’s view, people like O’Brien were the freaks for not embracing insects the way he did: as a sustainable (and delicious) source of protein eaten by billions of people around the world, especially in Africa, Asia, and Latin America.

“We’re really the weirdos because we don’t eat bugs,” Mr. Gordon told Business Insider in 2013. “Western ideas about taste are pretty narrowly defined.”

Mr. Gordon began chewing on the idea of eating insects while writing his 1996 book “The Compleat Cockroach,” about their biology, history, and behavior. (There is no typo in the title.)

Intended as a paean to a “wizened old soul,” as the introduction describes the six-legged critter, Mr. Gordon cast a wide net in his research. In “Some New and Interesting Points in Ships’ Hygiene” (1911), by the British medical official W. Melville-Davison, he read a passage that made his antennae twitch.

“Shelled cockroaches,” Melville-Davison wrote, “are in flavor similar to shrimps.” With proper salting, they taste delicious “in certain popular sauces.”

Mr. Gordon thought, “Wow, this is really weird,” he later told The Kansas City Star.

In “The Compleat Cock-

ALEXANDRA WYMAN/INVISION FOR FOCUS FEATURES/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chef and insect enthusiast David George Gordon pictured at Comic-Con in 2014 in San Diego.

roach,” he included a section on cuisine, describing ways that cockroaches have been prepared for centuries. Roach jam, he wrote, is a “supposedly succulent dish made from a choice selection of blattarians that were to be simmered in vinegar all morning, then dried in the sun.”

Mr. Gordon then began researching other insect delicacies. He was astonished to learn that insects were an ordinary food in many cultures — a discovery that made him feel that westerners, especially Americans, had been missing out.

“Once I got more information, rather than write a scholarly text, I thought a cookbook would be a really cool way of getting my message across,” Mr. Gordon told The Virginia Quarterly Review in 2016.

He tested recipes he had come across in entomology and anthropology research journals as well as ones from bug experts including Zack Lemann, an entomologist and insect keeper.

Mr. Gordon sourced his insects from suppliers whose typical customers were pet stores and research laboratories. The bugs arrived alive and went into the freezer for their final slumber.

“That’s probably the most humane way to dispatch the bugs because they’re basically drifting off into a deep sleep, kind of like a Jack London story,” he told Vice. “They just don’t wake up.”

Baez, who was visiting from Florida, was playing touch football with his three brothers outside the family’s house in the University Heights section of the Bronx when the football hit two police cruisers in separate incidents.

Officers tried to arrest the brothers for disorderly conduct. One of the officers, Francis X. Livoti, grabbed Anthony Baez by the neck and applied the fatal chokehold. At the time, police said that Baez, who was 29 and worked as a security guard, had died of an asthma attack.

Justice came unevenly. In October 1995, after a judge dismissed the Bronx district attorney’s indictment of Livoti, Mrs. Baez led a sit-in that blocked the entrance to the district attorney’s office for most of the day.

When District Attorney Robert Johnson talked to the protesters, Mrs. Baez demanded that Johnson, who had not yet decided to seek a new indictment, “promise that he’s going to reindict Livoti.”

Livoti was indicted again two months later, but was acquitted of criminally negligent homicide in November 1996.

Four months later, in a separate legal proceeding conducted by the New York City Police Department, the deputy commissioner for trials ruled that Livoti had used an illegal choke hold on Anthony Baez and should be fired. Police Commissioner Howard Safir soon after dismissed Livoti.

Iris Baez, New York mother, activist, and a voice against police brutality; at 80

By Richard Sandomir
NEW YORK TIMES

Iris Baez, who turned to activism against police brutality after her son Anthony was asphyxiated by a New York City police officer using an illegal chokehold — and who became a matriarchal figure for families whose children had been killed by officers — died on Sept. 10 in Orlando, Fla. She was 80.

Her death, at a hospital, was caused by uveal melanoma, a form of eye cancer, her daughter Linda Baez said.

During the three decades after Anthony’s death on the street outside their home, Mrs. Baez spoke at demonstrations, ran for political office, lobbied against laws that kept police records secret, and used her firsthand experience to comfort grieving families in their darkest hours, encouraging them to become activists, as she had.

In 2015, Baez pushed New York Governor Andrew Cuomo to sign an executive order requiring a special prosecutor — he chose the state attorney general — for cases that involved unarmed civilians killed by police officers.

Iris Maria Rivera Lopez was born on Oct. 21, 1945, in Ponce, Puerto Rico, and moved to the Bronx with her mother, Rosa Lopez, a seamstress, when she was about 2 years old. Her father, Ramon Rivera, who was not married to her mother, remained in Puerto Rico.

On Dec. 22, 1994, Anthony

POWER PLAY

A Kennedy family feud is unfolding over who should control the Hyannis Port compound Party there for a disgraced ex-CEO draws rebuke from Ted Kennedy Jr.

By Shirley Leung
GLOBE COLUMNIST

The 80th birthday bash Friday night for disgraced former Tyco International CEO Dennis Kozlowski at the Kennedy compound in Hyannis Port was a tame affair compared to his notorious parties of the past: no togas or ice sculptures of Michelangelo's David peeing vodka.

That hasn't made the soiree any less embarrassing for the Kennedy family.

The clan has been sorting out how the compound's main house, which is owned by the Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate and is typically used by nonprofits, got rented out for a private party to someone convicted of pilfering close to $100 million from his company two decades ago and who became the poster child for greedy CEOs of that era.

The house belonged to Senator Ted Kennedy, and after his death in 2009, his widow Vicki Kennedy donated the famous waterfront home to the institute as a study center. The institute aims to build on Kennedy's legacy of working across the political aisle and to encourage bipartisanship.

The nonprofit took possession of the property in 2012, saying the move "fulfills a promise made by Senator Kennedy to his mother, Rose, that the home be preserved for charitable use."

After the New York Post broke the news last week about Kozlowski's "Evening in Camelot" birthday party, Ted Kennedy Jr., the late senator's eldest son, went on the offensive.

"This event demeans and undermines my

POWER PLAY, Page D2

Get in the loop with a twice-weekly dive into the power players and moves driving business in Massachusetts. Sign up for The Boston Globe's scoop-driven Power Play newsletter, authored by prominent Globe columnists Shirley Leung and Jon Chesto.

ANALYSIS

'A mutual need'

Patrick Clancy wanted to say his piece. '60 Minutes' needed a coveted interview. The pairing was the opposite of the media circus that overwhelmed his ex-wife's trial.

60 MINUTES/CBS NEWS

Patrick Clancy's appearance on "60 Minutes" was his first national TV interview since a judge declared a mistrial in the case of his ex-wife, Lindsay Clancy, for murder charges in the deaths of their three children.

By Aidan Ryan
GLOBE STAFF

Patrick Clancy was ready to speak his mind on a national platform. "60 Minutes" needed to prove it could still land one of the most sought-after interviews in media.

Clancy's appearance on the embattled news show was his first national interview since a judge declared a mistrial in the case of his ex-wife, Lindsay Clancy, facing murder charges in the deaths of their three children. It was a straightforward, insightful account of his personal tragedy, in stark contrast to the media circuses that have surrounded both the trial and the overhaul of the venerated CBS News program under editor in chief Bari Weiss.

Speaking with new "60 Minutes" correspondent Ross Douthat, Patrick Clancy talked about his grief and condemned the horde of gadflies online who have spread baseless conspiracy theories about him and the deaths of his children. His new wife, Rachel Danis, appeared with him and they shared that they're expecting a child.

He teared up at one point when recalling his last few days with 8-month-old Callan, who he said died in his arms.

"I really thought there was a chance that Callan would live," Clancy said. "And then when I got to the hospital, I saw the doctor. I saw the look on her face, and I knew that it wasn't going to be a good prognosis."

The interview broke some news, including that Clancy and Danis are starting a family and the revelation that Clancy was put into an ambulance after suffering a "massive traumatic panic attack" during a break in his testimony. But there were no major fireworks or intense questioning, nor was there a huge break in style for the program from Douthat, who has never worked in television. Instead, Clancy got the opportunity to speak at length about how the devastating case has impacted his life, and the show won praise from some critics for its introspective sit-down.

"Credit is merited when it's due: CBS News' newly minted '60 Minutes' correspondent Ross Douthat landed a thoughtful, emotional interview with the person who may have elicited more speculation than anyone else this year," wrote Variety chief correspondent Daniel D'Addario in a review Sunday night.

Last night marked Douthat's first major interview

CLANCY, Page D4

BOLD TYPES

Book highlights the immigrant experience

Urban design sage Krieger's latest, "Greenhorn," describes his life story

By Jon Chesto
GLOBE STAFF

Alex Krieger is known for his urban design work, his architectural career, and his books and teachings on those subjects — including "Mapping Boston," which should be on every Bostonian's coffee table.

With Krieger's latest project, he wants to be known as something else: an immigrant. He describes his life story in a nearly 250-page memoir, "Greenhorn," published this summer through Atmosphere Press. He'll discuss the book at 5 p.m. on Thursday at the Norman B. Leventhal Map & Education Center, in the Boston Public Library's McKim Building.

Krieger came to the United States at the age of 9, the child of Holocaust survivors from Poland who settled in the Chicago area. He chose the book title because the term "greenhorn" has been used as a derogatory nickname for immigrants, but it has also been reclaimed by them with a self-deprecating sense of pride.

One of the main reasons Krieger started writing the memoir was the increasing demonization of immigrants that he's witnessed in recent years. "The distance we've come from being an accepting immigrant's nation versus now actually motivated me as much as anything else," Krieger said.

The book does cover Krieger's storied career, ranging from neophyte ar-

BOLD TYPES, Page D3

Alex Krieger's memoir covers his storied career.

CHRIS MORRIS FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

TRENDLINES

Jobless claims audit gets busy signals
But do customer complaints signal a bigger issue with system?

By Larry Edelman
GLOBE COLUMNIST

"We're the phone company. We don't care, we don't have to."

— Ernestine, telephone operator

Yes, I'm old enough to remember when Lily Tomlin's Ernestine character delivered the line above in a Saturday Night Live faux commercial back in 1976.

Ernestine comes to mind when I hear complaints about poor customer service at the state Department of Unemployment Assistance, which processes jobless claims and pays benefits to laid-off workers. Telephone wait times are notoriously long, and sorting out a claims problem can drive even the most even-tempered person to distraction.

For younger readers, a better pop culture touchstone may be Selma and Patty, twin sisters from "The Simpsons" who

TRENDLINES, Page D2

THE BOSTON GLOBE

25

Index of publicly traded companies in Massachusetts

Globe 25 index

Yesterday 261.14 ▲ 4.44 ▲ 1.7% ▲ YTD 7.9%

	Price	Chg	% chg	Market cap (bil.)
GE VERNOVA INC (GEV)	946.22	+5.89	+0.6	252.0
THERMO FISHER (TMO)	658.76	+7.31	+1.1	243.6
ANALOG DEVICES (ADI)	383.00	+7.28	+1.9	185.6
TJX COS INC (TJX)	130.96	+3.72	+2.9	144.1
VERTEX PHARM (VRTX)	510.72	+2.38	+0.5	129.4
AMERICAN TOWER C (AMT)	174.60	+0.62	+0.4	81.4
MODERNA INC (MRNA)	172.94	+18.90	+12.3	69.0
BOSTON SCIENTIFC (BSX)	43.72	+0.38	+0.9	63.4
TERADYNE INC (TER)	381.54	+10.07	+2.7	59.7
STATE ST CORP (STT)	184.40	+1.53	+0.8	50.7
KEURIG DR PEPPER (KDP)	30.62	-0.34	-1.1	41.7
WATERS CORP (WAT)	423.92	+2.29	+0.5	41.6
IRON MOUNTAIN (IRM)	116.89	+2.55	+2.2	34.8
ALNYLAM PHARMACE (ALNY)	244.32	+4.76	+2.0	32.7
BIOGEN INC (BIIB)	219.07	+3.57	+1.7	32.4
SYMBOTIC INC (SYM)	43.96	+2.07	+4.9	26.6
EVERSOURCE ENERG (ES)	66.89	-0.83	-1.2	25.2
VERALTO CORP (VLT)	95.18	+0.69	+0.7	23.2
ENTEGRIS INC (ENTG)	143.14	+0.89	+0.6	21.9
MACOM TECHNOLOGY (MTSI)	279.11	+3.25	+1.2	21.3
MKS INC (MKS)	256.92	+4.84	+1.9	17.4
AKAMAI TECHNOLOG (AKAM)	117.41	+12.89	+12.3	16.9
CLEAN HARBORS (CLH)	311.43	-4.37	-1.4	16.4
PTC INC (PTC)	135.28	-0.61	-0.4	14.7
VICOR CORP (VICR)	223.90	+1.18	+0.5	10.3

Markets

Oil prices fall, still $100 a barrel

Wall Street climbed to the edge of its all-time high on Monday, and stocks rallied worldwide after oil prices and yields in the bond market surrendered their market-rattling gains from last week. Stocks got help from the price for a barrel of Brent oil falling 3.4 percent to $100.34. While that’s still much higher than its roughly $72 price from earlier this summer, it’s down from the nearly $110 it touched last week. Oil prices have been swinging up and down as some crude from the Middle East is able to sail through the Strait of Hormuz to get to customers, though nowhere near as much as the industry would like because of the war with Iran. With big US companies continuing to deliver strong growth in profits that support their stock prices, Morgan Stanley’s Michael Wilson says another leg higher in prices for oil, gasoline, and other refined products is the main near-term risk he sees that could keep the US stock market from rising to his forecasted target for the year’s end. The average price for a gallon of regular gasoline across the US has already climbed to nearly $4.48, per AAA. That’s up from less than $4.32 a week ago and $3.18 a year ago.

— ASSOCIATED PRESS

DOW JONES industrial average

Yesterday 52,048.83 ▲ 366.19 ▲ 0.7% ▲ YTD 8.3%

NASDAQ Composite index

Yesterday 27,122.09 ▲ 599.55 ▲ 2.3% ▲ YTD 16.7%

S&P 500 index

Yesterday 7,764.70 ▲ 114.20 ▲ 1.5% ▲ YTD 13.4%

SOURCE: Bloomberg News

Kennedys differ over storied site

►POWER PLAY
Continued from Page D1

father’s intent,” he told the Post. “After years of having our family’s efforts to work with the Institute dismissed, I am calling for the immediate transfer of the deed to an organization that is better suited to preserve, sustain, and advance the values and purpose to which my father entrusted his home.”

I reached out to Ted Kennedy Jr. for further comment. His brother Patrick and cousin Joe Kennedy III both serve on the institute board and Joe became co-chair in April. Can’t they all get along? Ted declined to elaborate. “I stand by my statement and don’t have anything else to add at this point,” he wrote in an email.

The leadership at the institute, in its own statement, made clear its position: “The board has no plans to change the ownership of the Kennedy compound now or in the near future.”

The institute went on to say it allows outside groups, for a rental fee, to use the Kennedy house in Hyannis Port, as well as the institute’s main building in Dorchester, next to the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Museum.

“The event last week was a rental of the lawn space for several hours,” the institute said in a statement. “We respect and cherish Senator Kennedy’s legacy and intentions, and will always consider and appreciate the views and opinions of the Kennedy family.”

SUSAN WALSH/ASSOCIATED PRESS/1992

Senator Edward M. Kennedy and Victoria Reggie Kennedy at the compound in 1992. She donated the main house there to the institute bearing his name in 2012.

Emotions have run high over the fate of the main house, a sprawling white clapboard house that overlooks Nantucket Sound. Patriarch Joseph P. Kennedy Sr. purchased the compound in 1928 as a summer retreat, and since then generations of Kennedys have gathered there to celebrate John F. Kennedy’s presidential election and weddings, and to mourn tragedies and lives cut short.

But it’s not just family members who are upset about the recent Kozlowski party.

On Sunday, Jack Wilson, the former University of Massachusetts president who served as interim president of the institute, wrote in a Facebook post that he was “shocked” to learn about family strife over the house.

During his tenure, he recalled working with Teddy Jr., Vicki Kennedy, and other family members on what he described as a “very sensitive donation.” Institute officials knew the house would be costly to maintain, and while Wilson can appreciate the financial pressure to rent it out to generate revenue, “this does look like an inappropriate use,” he wrote.

It’s unclear how the institute vets who gets to use the Kennedy house, and how much the board gets involved.

As for the Kozlowski party, some wonder if the former corporate titan called in a favor with Bruce Percelay, the Boston developer and publisher of N Magazine, who chaired the institute board for five years.

Kozlowski has a home on Nantucket, and the two have been friendly. Percelay interviewed him for a 2021 magazine piece, “The Fall and Rise of Dennis Kozlowski.”

But Percelay, who stepped off the board at the beginning of this year, said he did not have a hand in Kozlowski booking the Kennedy compound.

“The idea was completely initiated by Dennis Kozlowski,” Percelay told me. “It may be easy to somehow connect the dots, but they do not connect.”

However, Percelay did get an invitation to the birthday party, and he attended along with about 150 guests eating steak, halibut, and cake in a big white tent on the compound’s lawn.

“It was subdued,” he said. “It was all about his kids and grandkids. . . . It’s not what one would have expected.”

Shirley Leung can be reached at shirley.leung@globe.com.

Converse says it’s sorry for ad that evoked racist imagery

By Dave Collins
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The sneaker company Converse has removed a social media ad that sparked outrage among critics who viewed it as evoking the Ku Klux Klan and lynching.

The Instagram ad photo showed K-pop singer Karina wearing a skirt and holding a pair of Chuck 70 X sneakers. Critics lashed out online, saying that a white triangular image created by lighting on the skirt resembled a KKK hood and that the way she held the sneakers made them look like the dangling feet of a lynching victim.

Converse, owned by Nike, issued a statement apologizing and saying it removed the ad.

“We’re sorry,” said the statement, first released on Friday. “We understand why this image is deeply upsetting and recognize that we got this wrong. We removed it from our channels and are working to remove it everywhere it appeared. This should not have happened and we will do better.”

Converse, based in Boston, declined on Sunday to answer questions seeking additional information, including how the company screens ads before they are posted and how the ad was approved.

Karina and her management company,

CHARLES KRUPA/ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE

Converse said, “This should not have happened and we will do better.”

SM Entertainment Group, did not respond to messages through their Instagram accounts.

Retailers and top fashion brands have issued a string of apologies over the years for products criticized as being racially insensitive.

Last month, retailer Target pulled a children’s Halloween costume from its shelves after widespread social media backlash, apologizing for selling a garment that critics said evoked racist minstrel caricatures.

The Converse photo sparked swift criticism, including calls for staff involved in the ad to be fired and for a boycott of the company. In a slew of comments on social media, posters questioned how the ad could have cleared the company’s advertising vetting process. Other commenters defended Converse, saying they didn’t believe it was intentional.

Lee Merritt, a civil rights attorney based in Texas, posted on Instagram that Converse’s apology “doesn’t undo what got past legal, marketing, and leadership at every step.”

“We keep having this conversation because corporations keep failing the same test,” he wrote. “Do better means catching this before it airs — not after we’re offended.”

Converse, founded in Malden in 1908, makes the iconic Chuck Taylor All Star sneaker. It was first released in 1917 as a non-skid basketball shoe, adding the signature of Taylor — a basketball player who promoted the sneaker — in 1934, according to the company’s website.

Does state audit of DUA signal a bigger issue?

►TRENDLINES
Continued from Page D1

work at the Department of Motor Vehicles: “Some days, we don’t let the line move at all. We call those weekdays.”

The DUA has long been an easy target for the public’s ire, especially after the botched handling of billions of dollars in COVID-era payments. But is its bad reputation as out-of-date as the telephone operator?

Moreover, does the focus on customer service, while important, divert attention from a bigger issue: Beacon Hill’s failure to fix the unemployment insurance system’s broken finances.

The news: A report released Monday by state Auditor Diana DiZoglio found that deficiencies at the DUA’s call center and in its handling of initial claim checks persisted well beyond the pandemic, when the agency was perhaps understandably overwhelmed.

Citing a lack of performance standards, the audit found more than half of the people who contacted the department’s call center in the year through Aug. 26, 2025, sat on hold for more than 30 minutes. And about half of those callers — or 24 percent of the total — waited for more than an hour to reach an agent or get an automated voice prompt.

From July 1, 2022, through

JOHN TLUMACKI/BOSTON GLOBE

State Auditor Diana DiZoglio released a report on Monday.

June 30, 2024, the department fell short of acceptable timeframes set by the federal government to send out a first claim payment.

Frustrated claimants frequently turned to their legislators for help, raising “concerns regarding DUA’s ability to address claimant issues on its own, without legislative intervention,” according to the audit.

Why it matters: Losing a job can create financial stress even when unemployment checks are delivered promptly.

“When hardworking people lose their jobs, unemployment insurance becomes a lifeline that allows them to continue to pay bills while they search for a new job,” DiZoglio said in a statement. When those benefit payments are delayed, “job search resources are unavailable, and complaints are not tracked and prioritized appropriately, the system fails job seekers and taxpayers alike.”

The other side: The DUA told me it has made significant progress since the periods covered in the audit.

That includes cutting call wait times to between 4 and 11 minutes and speeding up claims processing.

In the summer and fall of 2025, about 53 percent of claims were processed within 30 days, the DUA said. In July this year, the department says that was up to nearly 70 percent. Claims paid within 21 days and 28 days also have improved.

While the agency often falls below federal standards for how quickly claims are paid, it should be noted that the Trump administration has cut funding to all state unemployment programs. Massachusetts’ base grant was $56 million in the current fiscal year, down by nearly a quarter from three years earlier.

“DUA will continue to build on these and other improvement efforts to deliver a world-class customer experience,” an administration spokesperson said in an email.

The big picture: Employers fund the unemployment insurance system, and the state spends that money freely.

Local employers pay higher unemployment tax rates than their counterparts in most other states, but those rates are still not enough to cover benefits. It’s a structural deficit — $970 million last year alone — that Governor Maura Healey, like her predecessors, seems in no rush to close.

When I asked the administration about this in July, a spokesperson said it “continues to engage key stakeholders while it works to identify long-term solutions focused on the stability of the [unemployment] trust fund and the system as a whole.”

But the fact is few legislators, employers, or policy experts expect that funding gap to be closed any time soon. It would require politically unpopular tax increases, benefit cuts, or some combination of the two.

Final thought: Kudos to DiZoglio for her efforts to hold the DUA accountable. Her pressure is yielding improvements.

But fixing the unemployment system is beyond the auditor’s mandate.

Making tough decisions requires leadership — and that’s been lacking at the State House for too long.

“Our line might go something like: ‘We don’t care, we don’t have to.’”

Larry Edelman can be reached at larry.edelman@globe.com.

TALKING POINTS

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE

BESSENT: US PROPOSES AI INCIDENT ALERT SYSTEM IN TALKS WITH CHINA

Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent said Sunday the United States has proposed a new “notification mechanism” for artificial intelligence incidents that could affect national security, part of weekend discussions ahead of talks at the White House this week between President Trump and China’s Xi Jinping. “We want a shared vision of common goals and common threats,” Bessent told reporters after talks with Chinese Vice Premier He Lifeng in New York. “We think that just like any cross-border activity, that moving from opaque to more transparency between the No. 1 and the No. 2 AI powers in the world is very important.” Trump has resisted calls to slow down AI development, saying that would help China catch up to US companies.

— ASSOCIATED PRESS

DATA PRIVACY

GOOGLE HIT WITH $463 MILLION FINE FOR EU LOCATION DATA RULE BREACH

Google has been fined $463 million for breaching the European Union’s strict privacy rules because it mishandled users’ location data, the bloc’s data privacy watchdog said Monday. Ireland’s Data Protection Commission said its investigation found Google did not lawfully or fairly process location data in users’ Web & App Activity, a Google setting that tracks browsing and search history, and in their Location History, a service that maps places they’ve been with their mobile phones. Regulators also found the company failed to be lawful, fair, and transparent when it processed personal data in its Location Accuracy feature in the Android mobile operating system. Ireland is the lead regulator for Google in the 27-nation EU because the US tech giant’s European headquarters is based in Dublin. The investigation, which opened six years ago, examined how Google applied the EU privacy rule book, known as the General Data Protection Regulation, from the time it took effect in 2018 until February 2020. “This case centers around historical policies that have since been updated,” Google said in a statement. “From 2019 onwards, we’ve significantly evolved our practices and launched robust tools that make managing location data simple.”

— ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAST FOOD

OPERATOR OF 314 WENDY’S LOCATIONS IN US FILES FOR BANKRUPTCY PROTECTION

One of Wendy’s largest US franchisees has filed for bankruptcy protection after Wendy’s tried to terminate its franchise agreement. Meritage Hospitality Group, which operates 314 Wendy’s restaurants in 15 states, said in a statement last week it intends to keep operating its restaurants and paying its 9,000 employees during the bankruptcy process. Grand Rapids, Mich.-based Meritage filed its bankruptcy petition in federal court in western Michigan on Sept. 17. According to court documents, Wendy’s filed a notice of termination of the company’s franchise agreement “effective immediately” on Wednesday. Wendy’s claims Meritage owes $27.4 million in royalties and fees and $119.5 million in continuous operations fees, which companies charge to franchisees when they close locations, according to court filings. Meritage closed 60 underperforming Wendy’s locations late last year as part of a restructuring. Asked for comment Monday on Meritage, Wendy’s said its focus is “strengthening the long-term health of the brand.” “We partner closely with franchisees that are experiencing challenges to support them and evaluate each situation on a case-by-case basis to identify the best and most sustainable path forward,” the company said. Michigan is Meritage’s largest market; it operates 54 Wendy’s locations there. The company also runs 44 Wendy’s in both Georgia and Florida; 29 Wendy’s in Connecticut; 24 Wendy’s in Tennessee; 23 Wendy’s in Oklahoma and less than 20 Wendy’s each in Arkansas, Indiana, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, Texas, and Virginia.

— ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEGAL

JUDGE OK’S TRANSFER OF LAND IN WILDLIFE REFUGE TO SPACEX, FOR NOW

A federal judge on Monday cleared the way for a land exchange that would allow SpaceX, the rocket and satellite maker run by Elon Musk, to expand its launching and production site into a federal wildlife refuge in Texas. Judge Fernando Rodriguez Jr. of US District Court for the Southern District of Texas declined a request from conservation and tribal groups for a preliminary injunction to block the land exchange. The decision was a win for SpaceX, which wants to scale up its Starbase site in South Texas. Under the proposed land swap with SpaceX, the US Fish and Wildlife Service would give the company about 715 acres that are currently part of the Lower Rio Grande Valley National Wildlife Refuge, according to an environmental assessment issued in May. The parcels are near an area where SpaceX tests components of its Starship rocket. They include portions of the Palmito Ranch Battlefield, the site of the last land battle of the Civil War. In return, SpaceX would give the government around 683 acres it has purchased elsewhere in Cameron County, Texas. Some of these tracts would be added to the Laguna Atascosa National Wildlife Refuge, about 20 miles up the coast. Rodriguez, whom President Trump nominated during his first term, said the plaintiffs had not shown that they were likely to suffer irreparable harm as a result of the land exchange. The plaintiffs included the Center for Biological Diversity, a conservation group, and the Carrizo/Comecrudo Nation of Texas, a nonprofit group that represents members of the Carrizo/Comecrudo Tribe. Laiken Jordahl, the national public lands advocate at the Center for Biological Diversity, suggested that the group might appeal the decision.

— NEW YORK TIMES

ECONOMY

BOSTON FED PRESIDENT: IRAN WAR PUSHED HER TO SUPPORTING RATE HIKE

A top Federal Reserve official said Monday that the renewal of combat in the Middle East in August was a key reason she supported raising borrowing costs last week, when she also penciled in a second rate hike for later this year. Susan Collins (below left), president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, said that she agreed with the Fed’s decision Wednesday to lift its benchmark interest rate by a quarter-point to about 3.9 percent. She also expects that the Fed will keep rates unchanged next year, she added. “I did not see the inflation progress I was hoping to see,” she said. “Geopolitical developments suggest that we could continue to see additional pressures push on the energy side.” “There were reasons to see an increased likelihood of some of the scenarios in which inflation gets stuck above 2 percent,” she added, referring to the Fed’s 2 percent inflation target, which it has not hit for more than five years. Collins was the second Fed official Monday to outline their thinking about rates, along with Austan Goolsbee, president of the Chicago Fed, who spoke earlier in London and then addressed a roundtable of reporters. Both spoke about inflation pressures arising from supply shocks, such as the war in Iran, as well as from solid business and consumer spending. Neither Collins nor Goolsbee have a vote on the Fed’s rate decisions this year, but they participate in the meetings where rate changes are discussed. Goolsbee will have a vote next year, while Collins will have a vote in 2028. Collins also said that businesses in her district, which includes Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine, Rhode Island, and Vermont, continue to express concern about high costs.

— ASSOCIATED PRESS

C-SUITE

ETHAN ALLEN SAYS IT HAS STARTED SEARCH FOR NEW CEO TO SUCCEED TOP EXECUTIVE

Home furniture and furnishing retailer Ethan Allen Interiors Inc. said it has started a search for a new CEO to succeed Farooq Kathwari, who has been at the helm of the publicly traded company for nearly 40 years. The Danbury, Conn.-based retailer said Monday it has hired an executive search firm that is considering internal and external candidates. It said the board is committed to announcing its next CEO no later than June 30, 2027. That’s the date on which Kathwari’s current contract is scheduled to end. The company said that Kathwari will remain a nonexecutive member of the board after June 30 until the company’s 2027 annual shareholder meeting. Kathwari has been president of the retailer since 1985 and chairman and CEO since 1988, per the company’s website. He helped take Ethan Allen public in March 1993. The announcement comes after investor Doug Bergeron, who owns a more than 5 percent stake in Ethan Allen, shared publicly earlier this month that he had launched his own search for a new CEO in advance of the company’s annual shareholders’ meeting. A date hasn’t been set yet, but historically it’s held in November. Bergeron cited the company’s “apparent unwillingness” to address the need for a CEO succession. In response to Ethan Allen’s announcement on Monday, Bergeron issued a public statement that the company’s acknowledgment that it needs new leadership is “too little, too late.”

— ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKLAND

TRUST

BANK

Where Each Relationship Matters®

Member FDIC

Book describes life of an immigrant

► BOLD TYPES
Continued from Page D1
chitect working on the Red Line extension to Alewife to sage adviser for Harvard as it developed ambitious plans for its Allston real estate.
Krieger launched a small boutique architectural firm with cofounder Lawrence Chan in the 1980s. Around 15 years ago, they merged the business, then called Chan Krieger Sieniewicz, with the much larger NBBJ out of Seattle. He also maintained a long teaching career at Harvard’s Graduate School of Design. At 75, he’s essentially retired now, though he still teaches at Northeastern University and Wentworth Institute of Technology. Among other contributions, Krieger was an organizer behind building the New England Holocaust Memorial along Congress Street in the 1990s. “My involvement as an architect and my involvement as a teacher were responses to thanking America for providing these opportunities,” Krieger said.

Wu chats housing at Chamber
Mayor Michelle Wu told Boston’s business community last week that the city should use every tool at its disposal to address the housing crisis.
Well, maybe not every tool. She’s not ready to embrace the idea of lowering the city’s affordable housing mandate.
Speaking to the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, Wu rattled off accomplishments such as a downtown revival and hosting recent World Cup activities. She also announced the hiring of her new economic chief, Emily Knight, from The Engine, the MIT-affiliated tech accelerator, and the launch of a new fund to prepare for the city’s 400th anniversary celebrations, seeded by $4 million from Rob Waldron and Jen Waldron.
Wu highlighted two businesses — Moderna and Commonwealth Fusion Systems — that aren’t even in Boston, plus she heralded the opening of Singapore’s new “enterprise hub” in Cambridge. That’s all part of a message she has been trying to convey lately: The local economy doesn’t stop at city lines.
Much of her speech focused on what City Hall is doing to spur housing construction — a sore spot for many in the room who believe she isn’t doing enough to usher in more building.
Wu just started offering property tax abatements to help apartment developers, she’s meeting with reps from union pension funds to encourage them to invest, and she promised a new streamlined permitting process starting Oct. 1.

But chamber chief executive Jim Rooney brought up the city’s inclusionary zoning policy, which essentially requires 20 percent of units in larger projects be set aside for affordable purposes. The chamber wants a statewide cap on such policies at 10 percent. While saying her administration has studied the idea of lowering it, Wu downplayed the impact it could have, and didn’t seem ready to budge.

Banking on C-suite change
The first chief executive of the newly created Beacon Bank came from one of its predecessor banks, Brookline Bank. Now, his successor will be from the other one, Berkshire Bank.
On Monday, Beacon announced that chief executive Paul Perrault had retired, though he’ll stick around with a $120,000-per-month consulting contract for the next year.
The board named Sean Gray, 50, as Perrault’s replacement as chief executive of Beacon Bank and its holding company, Beacon Financial. Gray had been the chief operating officer since the merger took effect a year ago, and had been president and COO at Berkshire before the merger.

When the merger happened, an even number of board members came from each of the predecessor banks. Now, the chairman, David Brunelle, and its chief executive, Gray, are both Berkshire alums. The bank, based in the Back Bay, recently reported $22 billion in assets, and roughly 2,000 full-time employees. In a prepared statement, Gray emphasized how Beacon is well positioned to grow under his leadership, but promised (in bank marketing-speak) that Beacon won’t lose its personal touch in the process: “We will continue to support our regional operating model, local decision-making and market-centered leadership.”

It’s all Greek to us
T.A. Demoulas has remained out of the public eye since the board that oversees Market Basket suspended him, his father Arthur T. Demoulas, and his sister Madeline Demoulas in May of 2025.
Now, though, he’s set to enter the spotlight as he gets recognized by the Alpha Omega Council. The Greek-American organization is honoring him on Oct. 2 with its Emerging Leader Award as part of its 50th anniversary celebration. Journalist Nancy Agris Savage will also be honored.
In case you missed the most recent Demoulas family saga, Arthur T. Demoulas, the long-time Market Basket chief executive, argued that he and his kids were pushed out because of a feud with Arthur’s three sisters, who together own a majority of the company. Arthur wanted T.A. or Madeline to succeed him, but his sisters disagreed, and the board eventually fired him. A Delaware Chancery Court judge ended up ruling that the board was within its rights to do so. (The Tewksbury-based supermarket chain is currently led by president Chuck Casassa.)

The announcement about T.A.’s award makes no mention of this imbroglio, and instead focuses on his leadership at the company, which he joined full time in 2014, and his “commitment to family and community.”
“I’m proud of the contributions my family has made over many generations,” T.A. said in a prepared statement, “and I look forward to continuing that legacy.” Waltham attorney Harry Vlachos, the council’s president, singled out T.A.’s grocery prowess. “He knows that business,” Vlachos said in an interview. “When you get to the third generation, . . . that’s when the empire usually starts crumbling. He’s brought it on to the fourth. He has a remarkable history, and we wanted to recognize him.”

That was easy
Last year, Staples brought back the Easy Button.
Now, the Framingham-based office supplier is rolling out a counterpart: the Hard Button.
In a new ad campaign, Staples contrasts its red “Easy Button” and its black “Hard Button” to underscore why customers should choose Staples over its competitors. The slogan: “Don’t choose hard. Choose Staples.”
The videos highlight somewhat farfetched scenarios such as one bedraggled worker at a sporting goods store handing someone a toilet paper roll under a bathroom stall, or confronting a comatose colleague seemingly done in by an empty coffee pot.
Then, the contrast with situations that go almost too smoothly: a Staples delivery person magically appears to install new bathroom soap, or accept a hug for stocking the java.
Bob Sherwin, the company’s chief marketing officer, says the hope is to inform viewers that Staples offers more than a place to stock up on pens and paper or pick up new printer cartridges.

Jon Chesto can be reached at jon.chesto@globe.com.

Paramount settles with states, clearing way for mega merger

Completion of deal would create one of the largest entertainment companies in world

By Benjamin Mullin, David McCabe, Shawn Hubler, and Laurel Rosenhall
NEW YORK TIMES

Paramount reached an agreement Monday to resolve an antitrust lawsuit delaying its $111 billion acquisition of Warner Bros. Discovery, eliminating the last significant barrier to the creation of an entertainment and media colossus.

A group of states, led by California Attorney General Rob Bonta, a Democrat, sued Paramount in July, arguing that an acquisition of Warner Bros. Discovery would concentrate too much power over cable TV and blockbuster films under one company.

After weeks of on-again-off-again negotiations, Paramount and the states agreed to a number of concessions to complete the deal, Bonta said at a news conference Monday. The entertainment giant has agreed to establish a board to ensure the editorial independence of CNN and CBS News and committed to distributing 30 movies in theaters every year. The company also pledged to spend an additional $1.5 billion on film production over the next five years and guaranteed to increase the share of those movies that are made in America.

A completion of the blockbuster deal would create one of the largest entertainment companies in the world. It would pair Paramount's movie studio with Warner Bros., which has made films including "Superman," "A Minecraft Movie," and "Sinners." The combined company would also own two major streaming services, Paramount+ and HBO Max, and control both CNN and CBS News.

The deal would make David Ellison, the CEO of Paramount, one of the most powerful people in the entertainment industry, backed by the fortune of his father, billionaire Oracle co-founder Larry Ellison. The Ellison family's ties to President Trump — which included a dinner David Ellison hosted this spring "honoring the Trump White House" — have made Democrats and many journalists at CNN wary of the deal.

David Ellison praised the settlement in a statement, saying it would help attain the company's goal of building "a stronger Hollywood."

"Our shared aim was an outcome that best serves consumers, workers and — most importantly — the creative community so vital to the art of visual storytelling," Ellison said. "We're confident this agreement does exactly that."

Bonta praised the terms of the settlement but withheld his approval for the deal.

"I want to be clear about something right up front: This settlement is not a vote of support for this merger," Bonta said. "It is not a blessing of the broader merger. Broadly speaking, we believe further consolidation of markets that are central to American economic life doesn't serve the American economy."

As part of the agreement, Paramount must sell off parts of the company if it doesn't meet its obligations to produce and distribute films, according to the settlement. In an effort to keep cable TV prices down, the agreement also requires the combined company to sell its bundles of cable channels to distributors separately. In addition, Paramount must maintain ownership of the historical studio lots of both companies, a guarantor that production will continue in California, and operate a fund for purchasing independent films.

Paramount stopped short of agreeing to concessions that would alter the fundamental makeup of the combined company, such as selling CNN or one of its movie studios. The concessions were formalized in a consent decree, a mutually agreed upon list of compromises that resolve the lawsuit. A court still needs to approve it.

Massachusetts was among the 12 states involved in the agreement.

"While we were unable to secure every protection we fought for, having a seat at the table allowed us to secure enforceable protections for consumers that we could not guarantee through continued litigation," said Massachusetts Attorney General Andrea Campbell in a statement.

Shares of Paramount dipped about 3 percent, and Warner Bros. Discovery rose about 11 percent on Monday.

Paramount has said the deal was necessary, in part, to create a counterweight to increasingly powerful tech companies like Netflix that were muscling in on Hollywood. Ellison intends to close the deal in about two weeks, according to a letter to staff obtained by The New York Times. The company has agreed to pay Warner Bros. Discovery's shareholders $7 million a day if the deal does not close by Oct. 1, meaning the new timeline runs the risk of forcing Paramount to spend millions of dollars in fees before closing. That is still far less than the amount it would have to pay if the case had waited months to go to a trial that could last even longer.

Monday's settlement helps culminate Paramount's yearlong pursuit of Warner Bros. Discovery, a hard-fought battle with streaming giant Netflix that required a series of escalating bids from

MARIO TAMA/GETTY IMAGES

Massachusetts was part of the group of states, led by California Attorney General Rob Bonta, that sued Paramount in July. Attorney General Andrea Campbell said, "We were unable to secure every protection we fought for."

Campbell

Bonta

'I want to be clear. ... This settlement is not a vote of support for this merger.'

ROB BONTA, California attorney general

Lesley Stahl, one of the show's remaining correspondents, to calm the turmoil and promised editorial independence for "60 Minutes."

William Tong, the Democratic attorney general of Connecticut who signed onto the settlement, said in a statement that the state had "wanted and demanded full divestiture of CNN and CBS News" and was "deeply disappointed that we could not do more."

Norman Eisen, the leader of a coalition of entertainment and news industry professionals who opposed the deal, said in an interview that his organization, Democracy Defenders, would be establishing a new program as a watchdog for CNN and CBS News, funneling any criticism to the independent editorial board that Paramount has agreed to create.

Other opponents of the deal were less hopeful. The advocacy organization Free Press, which opposes media consolidation, accused Bonta of "capitulation."

Some analysts had warned that the merger would make redundant thousands of entertainment jobs in the state. Others warned that neither Paramount nor Warner Bros. could succeed alone, and that the status quo could bring even more sweeping layoffs.

"Some of you who may be watching this may have wanted a different outcome," Bonta said while facing a bank of television cameras during a livestream of Monday's announcement. "I understand that. I respect that."

Globe staff writer Dana Gerber contributed to this report.

Dunkin' and L.L. Bean's new collaboration is peak New England

Region's two iconic brands join forces

By Alexa Gagosz
GLOBE STAFF

It was perhaps inevitable: Dunkin' and L.L. Bean are getting into business together. At least, temporarily.

Dunkin' and L.L. Bean, two brands that have spent decades occupying roughly the same corner of the New England psyche, are teaming up in their first-ever collaboration. The pair announced Monday a limited-edition collection that includes a classic, crewneck Birdseye sweater and a Dunkin' version of the iconic Boat and Tote, L.L. Bean's simple but sturdy canvas bag.

The sweater, featured in Dunkin's signature vibrant magenta, will sell for $79.95. The canvas tote, which comes in the coffee chain's signature orange and pink with both brands' logos embroidered on it, will cost $59.95. They'll also have matching sweater and tote cup sleeves to slip your iced regular into.

In other words, Dunkin' is wearing L.L. Bean. And L.L. Bean is carrying Dunkin'. We are rapidly approaching peak New England.

The companies say the partnership is rooted in the normal routines of New Englanders, filled with morning coffee runs, weekends outdoors, and the seasonal traditions of fall here.

DUNKIN'/L.L. BEAN

No money was exchanged as part of the deal. Both companies keep what they sell on their respective channels, said L.L. Bean spokesman Jason Sulham.

The collection launches on Sept. 29 on L.L. Bean's website for National Coffee Day. But New Englanders will get a bit of a preview before then.

On Sunday, Sept. 27, L.L. Bean's store in Seaport will host a fall-themed celebration from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., complete with a donut wall, custom donuts and munchkins, and free Dunkin' coffee and refreshers.

And because a normal marketing campaign isn't enough, L.L. Bean's famous Bootmobile is hitting the road. From Monday until Sept. 29, it will travel from Maine to Boston dressed in a sweater-inspired design, stopping at various Dunkin' locations along the way.

Alexa Gagosz can be reached at alexa.gagosz@globe.com. Follow her @alexagagosz and on Instagram @AlexaGagosz.

The joint sweater and tote bag cup sleeves will make their debut next Tuesday.

'60 Minutes' chat served both sides

►CLANCY
Continued from Page D1

as a "60 Minutes" correspondent. Up until last month, he worked as a conservative columnist at the New York Times.

Emily Rooney, a former television executive, host of the media show "Beat the Press," and daughter of the late "60 Minutes" correspondent Andy Rooney, said the interview met the anticipation leading up to it, and she felt Douthat pursued thoughtful lines of questioning.

"I thought his questions were good for probing," she said. "I actually did."

But Rooney struggled to believe the segment was his own, arguing it came across like his producers had constructed the entire segment.

"I'll eat a hat if Ross Douthat wrote one piece of that," Rooney said. "They hired him because he's a conservative columnist. They put him in a prominent position to interview their first good get. He doesn't know how to write for TV."

A CBS News spokesperson said on Monday that Douthat wrote the piece. Generally, correspondents work with producers on stories.

Douthat is the most significant hire Weiss has made for "60 Minutes." Critics have accused Weiss of moving the show to the right politically, a charge that she and CBS News have rejected. Instead, they've argued that they are modernizing the program for an era of declining TV viewership.

Earlier this year, Weiss fired correspondents Sharyn Alfonsi and Scott Pelley, along with other staff. Both Alfonsi and Pelley accused her of political interference, which Weiss and CBS News denied. Weiss also replaced executive producer Tanya Simon with Nick Bilton, who, like Weiss, has never worked in television news.

CBS News is owned by Paramount, whose owner, David Ellison, has reportedly tried to curry favor with President Trump as the company is looking to buy fellow media giant Warner Bros. Discovery.

While ratings from Sunday night's show likely won't be available until Tuesday, the interview was promoted heavily on social media, with "60 Minutes" hoping for a ratings bump after its inaugural episode notched the lowest viewership the program has had since 2000.

Promotions for the interview were posted to social media starting on Wednesday. They featured a brief clip of Patrick Clancy walking to his chair with Douthat and sitting down for the conversation.

Unlike the promotional posts for the previous week's broadcast, the first teaser with Clancy did not include any personal context about him, seeming to bank instead on how his former wife's trial had become a viral phenomenon.

"Patrick Clancy. This Sunday. Only on 60 Minutes," a post on X and Facebook read.

The Clancy case drew a media circus, both at the five-week trial in Plymouth and online, where some content creators and influencers have spread baseless conspiracy theories about the case. The horrific murders have received international attention, and the trial has stirred new conversations about postpartum health.

Any prospect of the circus dying down after Judge William F. Sullivan declared a mistrial earlier this month dissipated after jurors began speaking to the media. The last two days of the trial were marked by a deadlocked jury, and those who spoke to media outlets said a single holdout juror believed Lindsay Clancy was guilty.

Outlets including NBC 10 Boston and the Globe reported that the holdout juror faces domestic violence allegations and is in the process of being evicted.

The "60 Minutes" segment is bound to help keep the trial in the news cycle and has already sparked a fresh round of reactions from people who have spread conspiracy theories online and felt there were still inconsistencies in Clancy's story. But the show was a chance for Clancy to clear the air about the grueling trial, and for "60 Minutes" to show it can still land a highly sought-after guest.

"I think it was a mutual need," Rooney said. "Clancy needed a wider audience, and so did '60 Minutes.'"

But with all the controversy surrounding "60 Minutes" since Weiss overhauled its staff, a ratings hit isn't a guarantee.

"I'm not sure they're going to get it," Rooney added.

Aidan Ryan can be reached at aidan.ryan@globe.com. Follow him @aidanfitzryan.

LEGAL NOTICES

LEGAL NOTICES

Notice of Proposed Agency Action

SUBJECT: MassHealth: Payment for In-state Acute Hospital Services and Out-of-state Acute Hospital Services, Effective October 1, 2026

AGENCY: Massachusetts Executive Office of Health and Human Services, Office of Medicaid

The Executive Office of Health and Human Services (EOHHS) is changing MassHealth payment methods for participating in-state and out-of-state acute hospitals effective for hospital rate year 2027 (RY27), which begins October 1, 2026. For RY27, EOHHS will also make MassHealth state plan supplemental payments to qualifying in-state acute hospitals. These changes are allowed under 42 USC § 1396a(a)(13) and 42 CFR § 447.205.

A complete description of the RY27 MassHealth in-state and out-of-state acute hospital inpatient and outpatient payment methods and rates and all other required information is available at in the Federal Fiscal Year 2027 Notices section. The documents are titled "Notice of Proposed Agency Action: MassHealth: Payment for In-state Acute Hospital Services and Out-of-state Acute Hospital Services, effective October 1, 2026", "Chart A – Out-of-state Acute Hospital Rates", and "Chart B – In-state Acute Hospital Rates".

For more information, contact Jin Pantano at the Executive Office of Health and Human Services, MassHealth Office of Provider Networks, 1 Enterprise Drive, 4th Floor, Quincy, MA 02171 or at acutehospitalrat@mass.gov. EOHHS specifically invites comments on the impact of the proposed action on member access to care.

Statutory Authority: M.G.L. c. 118E; St. 2026, c. 137; St. 2012, c. 224; 42 USC 1396a; 42 USC 1396b.

Related Regulations: 130 CMR 410, 415, 450; 42 CFR Parts 431 and 447.

Wherever you go, take The Boston Globe app with you Powerful journalism at your fingertips.

The Boston Globe app provides you access to our best features on your phone or tablet. Read the e-paper, play games, and catch up on the latest news, investigative reports, and thought-provoking opinions and analysis.

Download the app today and enable push notifications for the best experience.

App Store Google Play

The Boston Globe

DOONESBURY by Garry Trudeau

DUSTIN by Steve Kelley & Jeff Parker

RED & ROVER by Brian Basset

ARCTIC CIRCLE by Alex Hallatt

FOR BETTER OR FOR WORSE by Lynn Johnston

CURTIS by Ray Billingsley

RHYMES WITH ORANGE by Hilary Price

ARLO & JANIS by Jimmy Johnson

UNIVERSAL CROSSWORD PUZZLE

READING MATERIAL BY SARAH BUTKOVIC | EDITED BY DAVID STEINBERG

- ACROSS
- Tree with easily peeled bark
 - Dave of Soft Cell, or Cinderella's event
 - Melville captain
 - Only state whose seal was designed by a woman
 - High wind?
 - Confront
 - Heads, slangily
 - What few Founding Fathers actually wore
 - Lottery winner's feeling
 - "This news magazine needs more pages!"
 - Midwestern exclamation, stereotypically
 - Black, white or green drink
 - "Now this is a news magazine I'm excited to try!"
 - Wolfs (down)
 - "Please elaborate ..."
 - Hit head-on
 - Phone, wallet, ____
 - Bread piece that's often discarded
 - It's wider than a butte
 - Long sandwich
 - Unofficial part of SOS
 - Subsides
 - "This celebrity news magazine is sure to be full of gossip!"
 - Buddy
 - Airport with a BART stop

- DOWN
- Make an offer
 - Fan favorite
 - Actor Malek of "Bohemian Rhapsody"
 - One known for stirring the pot?
 - Spray down
 - Fire-breathing antagonist of Mario
 - Not much
 - Bull's-eye, for Target
 - Landlocked African country
 - ____ hound (dog breed with the lowest IQ)
 - Head light?
 - Aspire laptop maker
 - Borscht vegetable
 - Major NYSE events
 - Bean on the big screen
 - Audible finger wags
 - Receive a winter coat?
 - "We'll see ..."
 - Hosp. areas

1	2	3	4	5		6	7	8	9		10	11	12	13
14						15					16
17						18					19
	20					21					22
					23				24
25	26	27	28					29	30			31	32
33								34				35		36
37						38					39
40					41	42				43	44
	45			46				47
				48				49
50	51	52				53	54				55	56	57
58						59					60			61
62						63					64
65						66					67

29 Nixon's running mate
30 Atlantic catch
31 Director Gerwig
32 Stand seen in a studio
36 Covering in "Eyes Wide Shut"
38 Second person?
39 Silent "Welcome" giver
41 Stretch across

42 Bag of chips' accompaniment?
43 ____ Romeo
44 Poster, in a way
46 Met expectations?
47 Feels anguished, perhaps
50 "Git!"
51 Take home

52 "Miami ____"
53 Currency in Germany
54 Thus
55 "One more thing ..."
56 Smidgen
57 Apt name for a Christmas baby
61 Type of school or spa, informally

PLUGGERS by Rick McKee

Pluggers like to cook outside to avoid the smoke detectors.

JUMBLE CROSSWORDS™

by David L. Hoyt 9-22-26

CLUE ACROSS ANSWER

1. Evening horizon event
5. Not as favorable
6. Weight measure
7. Fish hawk

CLUE DOWN ANSWER

1. ____ machine
2. Uneasy
3. ____ Roosevelt
4. Into very small piece

CLUE: It's home to more than 15,000 lakes.

BONUS Complete the crossword puzzle by looking at the clues and unscrambling the answers. When the puzzle is complete, unscramble the circled letters to solve the BONUS.

How to play
©2026 Tribune Content Agency, LLC & Hoyt Designs. All Rights Reserved.
ANSWERS: 1A-Sunset 5A-Worse 6A-Ounce 7A-Eprey 1D-Swing 2D-Melrose 3D-Eleanor 4D-Fluffy B-Wisconsin
Send comments to DLHoyt@HoytInteractiveMedia.com

ANSWER: An old-style forcing response of 2NT, showing 13 to 15 points, balanced pattern and stoppers in the unbid suits, would be perfectly descriptive. Most partnerships now treat a 2NT response to a major as a conventional forcing raise. They would respond two diamonds. Some theorists think the old 2NT is too useful to give up.

