

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 2026

At a crossroad, US and Vt. policies clash

Deputy assisted in arrest of man later deported, despite ban on such help

By Paul Heintz
GLOBE STAFF

At first, Alex Jimenez wasn't overly concerned when a Vermont sheriff's deputy pulled over the car he was riding in last month on a dirt road near the Canadian border. The 22-year-old Mexican farmworker was in the United States illegally, but he knew police officers in Vermont are strictly limited in enforcing federal immigration law.

"I thought he would just stop us, do what he needed to do, and then we'd be on our way," Jimenez said through an interpreter. "I didn't think I had any reason to be afraid."

But the deputy, Sergeant Scott Costella, did something unusual. After obtaining a license from the driver of the Chevrolet Spark, who was a US citizen, the sheriff's deputy returned to his cruiser and used his personal cellphone to text his location to two US Border Patrol agents, public records show.

"Need one of you," Costella wrote.

When the federal agents arrived, they questioned the vehicle's occupants and, with Costella's assistance, took Jimenez into custody. After three weeks of detention in US Immigration and Customs Enforcement facilities around the country, Jimenez was deported to Mexico.

The episode has reignited a longstanding debate in Vermont over the extent police officers can cooperate with federal immigration authorities. And it's renewed scrutiny of the obscure federal program in which Costella was participating that day.

The program, Operation Stone-garden, provides overtime pay and equipment to local, county, and state law enforcement agencies that help federal authorities patrol the US border. A Globe investigation last year found 49 agencies in northern New England received more than $2 million through Stonegarden during the most recent funding period.

Critics of the program have long warned it conflicts with Vermont's Fair and Impartial Policing policies, which largely bar officers from facilitating federal immigration detentions or sharing certain information with the feds. They say the policies

BORDER, Page A7

Option for power rate comes with volatility

As Mass. looks into ways to cut bills, N.H.'s troubles could provide lesson

By Hiawatha Bray
GLOBE STAFF

As Massachusetts politicians scramble to respond to public anger over high electric bills, they are reviewing a different way for utilities to purchase electric power, one that had benefited some buyers but is under fire in neighboring New Hampshire.

Instead of utilities buying all their electricity months in advance, as in the current setup, the proposal would require them to purchase at least some power on the "spot market," where prices can fluctuate from day to day.

Part of broader efforts to rein in utility bills that are among the highest in the nation, the spot-market proposal has gained currency after a recent report asserting power generating companies are charging excessive prices for advance-purchase contracts.

It's a concept that's worked well for the city government of Boston, which for the past decade has bought all its electricity on the spot market, claiming about $60 million in savings as a result.

But spot buying has been a bust so far in New Hampshire, which just announced rate increases because surging gas prices earlier this year led to a spike in electricity bought on the spot market.

That isn't discouraging regulators in Connecticut.

ELECTRICITY, Page A10

In Medford, a change in who answers the call

Mayor, ambulance service in a scrap over payments

By Danny McDonald
GLOBE STAFF

By his own admission, Richard Raymond's time in Medford ended on a sour note: There was a disagreement between his company, Armstrong Ambulance, and the city over a contract provision that could not be bridged.

To hear Raymond tell it, his relationship with Medford, where Armstrong had provided 911 response for more than 25 years, fell apart after he says he was asked last year to do something he didn't think was legal: Pay the city a lump sum of $450,000.

"To me, that's a shakedown," said Raymond, who is Armstrong's chief executive.

Months after that request, and despite Raymond's attempts to find a middle ground, Armstrong no longer covered the city of 60,000, located off Interstate 93 a few miles from Boston.

The story of Armstrong and Medford offers a window into the unusual business of ambulance service in Massachusetts cities, while adding to the cavalcade of claims that Medford Mayor Breanna Lungo-Koehn's administration is deploying a

MEDFORD, Page A7

PHOTOS BY DAVID L. RYAN/GLOBE STAFF

Ben Murphy, Luke Greenberg, and Sam Stubbs helped harvest onions (below) at Barrett's Mill Farm in Concord.

LATEST SCOURGE FOR FARMERS: FUEL COSTS

Much of their work requires gas and diesel, yet no price relief in sight

By Omar Mohammed
GLOBE STAFF

Concord
Melissa Maxwell has been searching for ways to reduce her small farm's dependence on two diesel- and three gas-powered tractors, with fuel costs remaining abnormally high and no hint that they might return to normal. On a farm, that's obviously difficult.

Fuel prices have soared since the start of the US-Iran war six months ago. For Maxwell and her business partner, Lise Holdorf, fuel costs at Barrett's Mill Farm are up 76 percent. They're concerned that over time people may buy less of their products — dozens of varieties of vegetables, some fruits, and flowers — amid their own worsening financial situations.

"High fuel costs have a double effect on farms like [ours]," said Maxwell,

FARMERS, Page A10

At Grand Prix, politics in the rear view

The usual glacial pace of D.C. gives way to 200-mph IndyCars

By Julian E.J. Sorapuru
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — Military fighter jets, television helicopters, Air Force One, and a living, breathing bald eagle all soared above a red, white, and blued-out National Mall Sunday afternoon. But for the vast majority of the tens of thousands of people assembled in and around the Mall, their eyes were glued to the ground.

That's where 25 IndyCars zoomed at nearly 200 miles per hour on a course that transformed downtown D.C. into a speedway.

The track's seven turns directed drivers past the US Capitol, across Pennsylvania Avenue, around a Department of Justice

GRAND PRIX, Page A6

ALEX KENT/NEW YORK TIMES

With the Washington Monument as a backdrop, IndyCars raced by.

Sol survivor

Monday: Sun returns, warmer. High 81-86, low 62-67.

Tuesday: Mostly sunny. High 77-82, low 62-67.

Sunrise: 6:01. Sunset: 7:32.

Weather and comics, D4-5.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 310, NO. 55

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that a contract "ratification vote" may be near, a hopeful sign of progress in negotiations after the musicians authorized a strike. B1.

The Suffolk district attorney's race puts the record of incumbent Kevin Hayden to the test. B1.

Women doctors can face myriad obstacles — sham peer reviews, harassment, bullying — on their paths to become leaders in medicine, Kara Miller writes. D1.

Phoenix's impressive expansion over the decades has been due in large part to diverted water but now that spigot may be turned off. A2.

The Red Sox completed a three-game sweep of the Giants with a 5-4 victory. C1.

The Nation

DAILY BRIEFING

Officers arrested after traffic stop

Two Phoenix police officers, who were accused of beating a couple and shocking them with a Taser during an unreported traffic stop this month, have been fired and arrested on charges including kidnapping, aggravated assault, and aggravated robbery, the police chief said Saturday.

The officers, Luis Vasquez Jr. and Antonio Felix, were on duty when they stopped the couple at about 11:30 p.m. on Aug. 5 in south Phoenix, Chief Matthew Giordano said at a news conference. Detectives have confirmed that the officers physically assaulted both the man and the woman, and the investigation showed that a Taser was used on them, he said.

Neither officer reported the stop or activated his body camera, and there is no video of the encounter, Giordano said. The police have not determined why the officers stopped the couple or what motivated their actions.

The episode was so unusual that the police in Tempe, Ariz., who learned of it after finding the couple's abandoned car, initially suspected that the men might have been impersonating police officers.

The Tempe police report describes a harrowing and violent encounter.

NEW YORK TIMES

Tropical storm soaking Hawaii

HONOLULU — Tropical Storm Moke was swirling past Hawaii on Sunday, close enough to dump heavy rain on Big Island communities in the aftermath of Hurricane Lala.

The National Hurricane Center located Moke's center about 320 miles south-southwest of Hilo around midday. Top sustained winds were around 40 miles per hour, though the real impact is expected from rainfall in places where the previous weekend's hurricane flooded communities, triggered mudslides, and damaged roads and power lines. Two deaths linked to the hurricane have been reported in Hawaii.

Forecasters expected Moke to produce as much as 10 inches of rain across the Big Island, and up to 15 inches in some isolated places, enough to cause life-threatening flooding and mudslides. The center of Moke was expected to pass south of the Big Island then south of the smaller main islands in Hawaii early in the week.

In the eastern Pacific, meanwhile, Tropical Storm Iselle formed earlier Sunday and was gaining strength, far away from Mexico's southwest coast.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Taking a stand for bus stop seats

NASHVILLE — At least 100 handmade benches have appeared at downtown bus stops and elsewhere around the city, providing a place for riders to sit and wait.

But the benches, built by a band of civic-minded residents to fill a need they saw the city as neglecting, have become a flashpoint in the debate over whether Nashville is spending enough on its residents as tourism becomes a larger focus.

The city keeps removing benches, citing complaints and accusing the volunteer group of violating traffic laws with their placement. City officials say they are addressing the lack of benches — and could legalize those made by the group — but bureaucracy is slow.

In a statement last year, the bench builders called seating at bus stops an “issue of basic human dignity.” But as the effort expanded, it also became a grass-roots way of addressing the increasing demand for public transit in Nashville.

NEW YORK TIMES

‘It’s deeply concerning if this promise to us will once again be broken.’

GABRIEL LOPEZ, chairman of the Ak-Chin Indian Community

America’s desert metropolis is set to lose water

Colorado River states are now deadlocked over dwindling supply

By Reis Thebault
NEW YORK TIMES

From a secure, windowless room in northern Phoenix, technicians control the Colorado River water that sustains the United States’ largest desert metropolis.

The vast canal system the team oversees has, for four decades, conveyed an increasingly scarce commodity across 330 miles of rugged terrain to slake blossoming subdivisions, sprawling farmland, and, in recent years, a powerhouse semiconductor industry. It supercharged Arizona’s economy and transformed Phoenix into one of the nation’s fastest-growing cities.

But this lifeline, known as the Central Arizona Project, came with a catch. In exchange for billions of federal dollars to build it, the state agreed to lower-priority water rights, putting the aqueduct among the first in line for cuts in a time of deep drought.

Now that time has come. “It was the price we had to pay,” said Kathryn Sorensen, a former water director for the city of Phoenix. “The chickens have come home to roost.”

With the seven states that rely on the Colorado River deadlocked over how to split its diminishing supply, the Trump administration is pushing its own plan to divide the water. The three downriver states — Arizona, California, and Nevada — would most likely shoulder the most pain, but no single user stands to lose more than the Central Arizona Project.

Short-term reductions, announced by the federal government Friday, will cost Arizona roughly one-third of its share of river water over the next two years. But beyond that, a range of cutbacks remain possible.

Under the most severe outcome, the system would be cut off entirely during the driest years, setting off a social and economic meltdown Arizonans shudder to even imagine.

“They are threatening to shut down the Southwest,” said Brenda Burman, the project’s general manager. “It’s not possible to picture it.”

Water is gold in the western United States, and people have been fighting over every drop for generations. The Colorado, a river that supports 40 million residents and is buckling after decades of drought and overuse, is the fiercest battleground of all. Access to it is governed by an arcane legal system that prioritizes the oldest established users.

The earliest laws were written for a river that no longer exists, and states do not agree on how to proceed. The high-stakes talks have gained urgency as the water levels of the river’s largest two reservoirs, Lakes Mead and Powell, have dwindled in recent weeks to record lows.

Arizona officials say any proposal that cuts off the state’s canal system is unacceptable, and they have threatened to sue, initiating court battles that could go on for years. For now, water experts say, taps and sprinklers will continue running from Phoenix to Tucson.

But any serious hit to the state’s Colorado River supply is likely to drive up the cost of replacement water and lead to more groundwater pumping, jeopardizing an already depleted safety net for future generations.

Human life in the parched Southwest has always depended on harnessing water.

The prehistoric Hohokam people built a flourishing society in the Sonoran Desert by carving a network of irrigation canals. Hundreds of years after the mysterious disappearance of the canals, the Bureau of Reclamation in 1911 dedicated its first major dam outside Phoenix to bring more settlers to the valley.

But state leaders knew they would need another source of water to continue growing, and they had their eyes on the Colorado River.

“The Central Arizona Project was Arizona’s holy grail,” said Thomas E. Sheridan, a historian who has written extensively about the system’s origins.

After decades of bitter interstate disputes, Congress approved construction of the aqueduct in 1968. The project would suck water from the Colorado and transport it to faraway cities, tribes, and farms — an engineering marvel and a testament to the country’s belief that it could bend nature to its will.

PHOTOS BY REBECCA NOBLE/NEW YORK TIMES

Clockwise from top: A field of cotton at Ak-Chin Farms, which is irrigated with Colorado River water delivered via the Central Arizona Project; Gabriela Lopez, the chairman of the Ak-Chin Indian Community; Brenda Burman, general manager of the Central Arizona Project.

But California cajoled Arizona into a compromise. Even during times of shortage, the Golden State would get its full allocation of water, no matter what.

When the project made its first deliveries to Phoenix in 1985, the celebration was tempered by foreboding: “The time is going to come in the not too distant future when we are going to be looking for water again,” one member of Congress cautioned at the time.

Cities that count on the Central Arizona Project have tried to prepare. The region now uses less water than it did 40 years ago, even as its population has more than doubled, and it has frantically recharged its aquifers.

Most Arizona officials do not expect the federal government to approve more massive water infrastructure projects, but they insist Congress should help pay for smaller-scale solutions like desalination plants or dam expansions.

In Phoenix, which gets about 40 percent of its water from the canal, Mayor Kate Gallego said the federal government should kick in more for multibillion-dollar purification plants that will turn wastewater into drinkable water. She compared such funding with aid that helps coastal states rebuild after hurricanes — a national response to a different type of disaster.

Even tribes, which hold the most senior water rights in the state, are concerned about the federal government’s doomsday situation.

Members of the Ak-Chin Indian Community, who use Colorado River water to grow barley, potatoes, and corn on 16,000 acres south of Phoenix, are not sure how that water would be delivered if the Central Arizona Project lost its entire allotment.

The uncertainty has reopened old wounds. In the 1970s, after failing to prevent nontribal farmers from draining an aquifer below the Ak-Chin reservation, Congress passed a law to ensure the tribe would always have an alternative source.

“It’s deeply concerning if this promise to us will once again be broken,” said Gabriela Lopez, the tribe’s chair.

Bigger, hotter fires are slowly erasing America’s great forests

By Eric Nailer
NEW YORK TIMES

MIDPINES, Calif. — On a gentle slope on the western side of the Sierra Nevada, where a towering green canopy of ponderosa pines had stood for centuries, wildfires have transformed roughly 1,700 acres into brown, bare shrubland.

That forest is gone for good, scientists say. Spiky shrubs and poison oak have replaced the majestic trees. All that is left of the pines are burned logs and dead branches.

It is part of a wider transformation that is taking place across the West, from Oregon to New Mexico, as bigger and hotter wildfires sweep through forests that have not evolved to survive such high-intensity blazes and a warmer climate. Recent studies estimate that as much as 40 percent of Western conifer forests will turn into shrubland by the year 2100 as a result.

“This is a permanent shift from one ecosystem type to a fundamentally different one,” said Winslow Hansen, a forest ecologist at the Cary Institute of Ecosystem Studies, an independent research center in Millbrook, N.Y.

The consequences of the shift, for people and wildlife, are expected to be profound.

Researchers say that as trees disappear, winter and spring snow will melt faster, affecting wildlife as well as communities that are struggling with water shortages. Some Western states get as much as 75 percent of their water from snowmelt.

“When you remove the forest, that snow is more susceptible to melting earlier,” said Benjamin Hatchett, an interdisciplinary scientist at Colorado State University.

And he noted that a warmer, more arid climate dries out soil and pulls moisture from plants, making them more susceptible to wildfire. “That thirstier atmosphere is a big concern,” he said.

Forests also absorb planet-warming carbon dioxide from the atmosphere. Bigger, older trees store more carbon than younger trees and shrubs. The loss of conifer forests today means a hotter tomorrow.

To better understand these cascading effects, Hansen and Johan Eckdahl, a postdoctoral researcher at the University of California, Berkeley, visited the Sierra Nevada this month. On a 100-foot hillside plot that burned in the 2022 Oak fire, they recorded each flowering plant and shrub, filled plastic bags with soil, and checked the ground moisture and temperature with a special probe.

Under normal conditions, seedlings would sprout all over after a fire. Young trees would grow and compete for space, water and light, and the forest would return after a decade or two. But the combination of more intense fires and a warmer, drier climate has stopped this age-old process of regeneration.

As Hansen stood among the brush at the research site, the absence of new growth was stark. “We haven’t found one ponderosa seedling,” he said. “Ponderosa seeds have adapted to fire. That’s how they live. But the fires are just too hot for them.”

NIC COURY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

A firefighter cut brush above Deetjen’s Inn as the Timber Fire burned in Big Sur, Calif., earlier this month.

Even if seedlings do take hold, they face tough odds. Across the Sierra Nevada, about one-fifth of the conifers, or cone-bearing trees, are not well suited to the current warming climate.

In addition to his work at the Cary Institute, Hansen directs the Western Fire and Forest Resilience Collaborative, a group of 40 researchers who are using remote satellite sensing, 3D mapping and computer models that simulate future climate conditions to track the health of western forests.

This summer, survey crews hired by the collaborative are mapping the severity of fires at more than 100 sites in California, Colorado, and New Mexico. The goal is to guide researchers trying to better understand how moisture, nutrients, and soil microbes influence to what extent forests will recover and how long it will take.

Across the Southwest, which is drier and subject to more prolonged droughts than other areas such as the Pacific Northwest, ponderosa pine forests are particularly at risk of failing, according to Jonathan Coop, a fire ecologist at Western Colorado University who has been tracking this ecological shift for the past two decades.

This month, Coop and colleagues published a study in the journal Science Advances that found wildfires are now getting so large and so fast that pine seeds can’t regenerate. The team looked at almost 3,500 wildfires from 2012 to 2023 in conifer forests in Canada and the western United States.

“Forests do have innate resilience, and under normal circumstances they can take a hit or two and bounce back,” Coop said. “But circumstances just aren’t normal anymore.”

As natural regeneration falters, scientists and conservationists are trying to give forests a helping hand.

Blaze near Reno spurs evacuation orders, warnings

By Bernard Mokam
NEW YORK TIMES

A wildfire burning in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada and moving toward Reno has forced thousands of evacuations, shuttered two hospitals, and prompted emergency declarations from state officials.

The blaze, known as the Hawk fire, has grown to more than 13,000 acres since Saturday without any containment and has encroached on the outskirts of Reno, a city of almost 300,000 people near the California border.

At a news briefing late Sunday morning, local officials suggested that about 90,000 people in the vicinity of the raging flames should evacuate.

About 42,000 of those people are under formal evacuation orders. All of the properties are northwest of downtown, according to Washoe County.

Governor Joe Lombardo of Nevada has issued a state of emergency in the county, which includes Reno and parts of Lake Tahoe, and activated the Nevada National Guard. He cautioned on social media Sunday that it was “still a rapidly evolving situation.” Six people have been injured, officials said.

Conflicting signals from Iranians on US sanctions

Security chief calls them ‘act of war’

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The new head of Iran’s top security body warned Sunday that Tehran will see any country’s support for new US economic measures against the Islamic Republic as an “act of war,” while Iran’s president defended a memorandum of understanding with the United States as the best way out of the stalled conflict.

Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent on Monday is expected to announce the new measures after the United States vowed to impose an “unprecedented” level of economic warfare and isolation on a country that has lived for decades under sanctions. Also Monday, Pakistan’s army chief is expected to visit Iran as mediators try to revive talks.

Meanwhile, attacks calmed on the Strait of Hormuz but posturing did not, as a recently created Iranian authority listed dozens of vessels it said will face restrictions on future transits.

Iran’s security chief sharpens warning to neighbors

The hard-line leader of Iran’s Supreme National Security Council, Mohsen Rezaei, issued his latest warning on X, with the comments quickly shared by Iranian state media.

It came a day after Rezaei’s most extensive public comments since being named to the post this month.

“If [Trump] wants to do something, we will retaliate in a seismic manner,” he had told the state broadcaster in an interview that aired late Saturday. He said Iran would target other oil-shipping routes from the Persian Gulf — alternatives to the Strait of Hormuz.

Rezaei, a former Revolutionary Guard commander and military adviser to Supreme Leader Ayatollah Mojtaba Khamenei, was part of senior appointments widely seen as hardening Tehran’s political and military stance.

Iranian president wants to move past ‘neither war nor peace’

Iranian President Masoud Pezeshkian earlier Sunday said the memorandum of understanding signed in mid-June was the best way to move beyond a situation of “neither war nor peace,” adding that Tehran can’t attract investment nearly six months after the war began.

“There is not a single provision in this agreement that amounts to capitulation,” Pezeshkian said in a speech published by state-run IRNA.

“The supreme leader sets the policies, and we will follow that path.”

The interim deal opened a 60-day period for talks aimed at ending the war and reaching an accord on Iran’s nuclear program. That period ended last week with no signs of compromise or extension.

No attacks confirmed on the strait, but new restrictions

There were no confirmed attacks in the Strait of Hormuz over the past 48 hours, a multinational coalition overseen by the US Navy said Sunday, with shipping traffic still at reduced levels. The US military said its blockade of Iranian ports had redirected 70 commercial ships and disabled three as of Sunday.

Iran’s recently created Persian Gulf Strait Authority, sanctioned by the United States, published a list of dozens of ships it said had violated arrangements for transiting the strait and would face future restrictions like fines or seizures. The strait had been considered an international waterway before the United States and Israel attacked Iran Feb. 28.

Iran and Oman, on the strait’s other side, are now discussing management of it, which is likely to include ships paying fees.

Pakistan’s army chief will visit Tehran

Pakistani Field Marshal Asim Munir will lead a delegation to Tehran Monday, Iranian state television reported, citing Iran’s Foreign Ministry spokesperson, Esmail Baghaei.

Two regional officials said the visit was part of Islamabad’s efforts to deescalate tensions between the US and Iran and urge them to return to the negotiating table. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter publicly.

Iran executes man arrested during January protests

The Iranian judiciary’s Mizan news agency reported the latest execution connected to nationwide protests early this year, saying Majid Adineh was arrested Jan. 9 in Mohammadshahr, west of Tehran.

He was convicted under Iran’s law imposing harsher penalties for espionage and cooperation with hostile states.

FRANCISCO SECO/ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Volodymyr Zelensky took a selfie with the heads of Nordic-Baltic countries during a summit in Kyiv Sunday.

Zelensky details rift with dismissed official

Claims defense minister’s moves were misguided

By Samya Kullab

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KYIV — Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said that he believes actions taken by dismissed defense minister Mykhailo Fedorov, including his involvement in mass protests and calls for an election, were misguided, as he publicly detailed their dispute for the first time.

Zelensky also alluded to problematic decisions over defense spending and said that inaccurate information provided by the Defense Ministry contributed to an awkward encounter with President Trump over the use of Starlink in Russia.

Zelensky disclosed figures showing Ukraine’s growing shortage of Patriot air-defense missiles needed to counter Russian ballistic attacks, with deliveries from Western allies declining in the past three years even as Russian missile strikes intensified.

He highlighted battlefield gains, however, saying Ukrainian forces have almost completely recaptured the Dnipro-petrovsk region, with only about 4 square miles remaining under Russian control.

The Ukrainian president made the remarks during a two-hour off-the-record meeting with reporters Saturday, with a transcript released publicly Sunday.

His comments ranged widely, covering the latest battlefield developments, efforts to counter Russian ballistic attacks, the state of peace negotiations, Ukraine’s budgetary challenges, and the political turmoil surrounding Fedorov’s dismissal.

“I really had and still have a very positive attitude toward Mykhailo. We have been through a lot together. But I believe that he himself goes, or is pushed, into the wrong things,” he said.

Fedorov, a popular minister credited with modernizing Ukraine’s armed forces and accelerating the military’s embrace of technology and drone warfare, was dismissed last month after reportedly falling out with the country’s top military commander. His removal triggered mass protests that lasted for weeks, but ultimately failed to force a reversal of the decision. Fedorov later called for an election.

Zelensky said that he had offered Fedorov four different options to continue working in the government. Fedorov, he said, rejected all of them.

The Ukrainian leader told journalists that he believes holding an election during the war would be a huge risk with the potential to “split Ukraine apart.”

“I believe elections during a war like this would generally pose enormous risks. Holding elections right now would be a tsunami for the state that would split Ukraine apart,” he said.

Zelensky said he had previously faced pressure to hold an election during the war, but no partners had come up with a plan for how a poll could be held safely, legitimately and democratically.

Zelensky appeared to link Fedorov to an awkward episode in-

‘I believe that [Mykhailo Fedorov] goes, or is pushed, into the wrong things.’

VOLODYMYR ZELENSKY

about his former defense minister volving Starlink and Elon Musk. Zelensky said that earlier this year, the Defense Ministry had told him that SpaceX had agreed to allow Ukraine to use Starlink over Russian territory to carry out deep strike operations, subject to political approval.

Acting on that, Zelensky said, he raised the issue directly with Trump. He told Trump that Musk had confirmed the proposed use. Zelensky said the two sides subsequently sought Musk’s confirmation and discussed financing for the project.

But at a later meeting, Zelensky said that Trump told him that Musk had rejected the proposal and accused him of having misled the US president. Musk considered the move a dangerous escalation, according to Zelensky.

“He said that I had supposedly deceived him, because Musk had denied Ukraine the use of Starlink on Russian territory. I went back to our Ministry of Defense and they said that maybe it was so,” he said.

Zelensky didn’t explicitly accuse Fedorov of lying. He said that the situation was among the reasons behind “some of the steps.”

Zelensky also pushed back against protesters’ vilification of former army chief General Oleksandr Syrskiy, whom he dismissed, and current Defense Minister Major General Yevhen Khmara, saying they had gone too far.

“Maybe someone doesn’t like Syrskiy for one reason or another. But the slogan’s ‘Syrskiy is the devil, Khmara is the devil,’” he said. “Listen, this is too much. Do you understand? In principle, you can’t treat the military like this and tolerate it, especially when it was the military that made it possible for any peaceful protests to take place in the Ukrainian capital at all.”

Zelensky also described severe financial pressure on Ukraine’s defense effort. He said that the Defense Ministry faced a $27 billion budget shortfall after spending decisions earlier in the year brought forward funds originally intended for the second half of this year.

DAILY BRIEFING

Indicted governor leaves office

MEXICO CITY — The governor of the Mexican state of Sinaloa — who returned to office Friday despite accusations by US prosecutors that he had conspired with a cartel — reversed course Saturday after widespread criticism, particularly from his own party.

The governor, Rubén Rocha Moya, said in a social media post Saturday night, about a day and a half after returning to office, that he had requested an indefinite leave of absence.

In April, US prosecutors unsealed an indictment accusing Rocha and nine other current and former Mexican officials, including a sitting senator, of taking part in a broad conspiracy to help the powerful Sinaloa cartel traffic drugs into the United States. A few days later, he stepped down — the first time.

Rocha, 77, has denied wrongdoing and called himself the victim of a political attack. But his return drew opposition within his own party, including from Mexican President Claudia Sheinbaum.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Powerful storm hits Baltic nations

WARSAW — Two people died and around half a million people were left without electricity across Latvia and Lithuania after a powerful cyclone, bringing rain and strong winds, hit the region on Saturday and into Sunday morning.

One person died in Jelgava, central Latvia, when part of a building collapsed on Saturday, and others were injured across the country. Wind speed exceeded 67 miles per hour on Saturday in the capital, Riga. At many weather stations, half of the average monthly rainfall was recorded on Saturday.

Rail and other public transport services were affected by trees and other objects falling on infrastructure.

One person also died in neighboring Lithuania after being hit by a falling tree. Others were injured and more than 200,000 residents were without electricity on Sunday. Strong winds also battered Estonia.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AFF VIA GETTY IMAGES

Residents and rescuers used an excavator to search for survivors Sunday after a landslide at a landfill in Conakry.

Deadly landslide at Guinea landfill

CONAKRY, Guinea — A mountainous heap of refuse collapsed at the largest landfill in Guinea’s capital of Conakry early on Sunday, killing at least 30 people, according to the central government.

Authorities said that heavy rains, which started at around 2 a.m., washed over the refuse at Dar Es Salam landfill and triggered a landslide that buried nearby shacks. A search and rescue operation was underway to find survivors. Six people were seriously injured and several homes were destroyed.

The site, an open-air waste dump, had been designated for closure on Sunday, according to Lieutenant Colonel Baldé Mamadou Bailo, the sanitation officer for the military engineering battalion.

People living near the landfill had been given eviction notices but many were still around at the time of the disaster, according to authorities.

“We will ensure that the remaining families are relocated elsewhere,” Dienabou Touré, the minister of territorial administration and decentralization, said at the scene.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

72 arrested amid Indonesia wildfires

JAKARTA — Indonesian police on Sunday arrested 72 people suspected of starting some of the recent forest and peatland fires as huge blazes in central and western parts of the country triggered a harmful cloud known as a choking haze.

Indonesia has been battling fires driven by an intensifying El Nino pattern and a prolonged dry season, generating dense smoke that crossed into Malaysia, according to Indonesia’s National Disaster Management Agency. Fires are a regular problem in the country and often strain relations with neighbors.

Plantation owners and traditional farmers often start fires to clear land for farming, said Mohammad Irhamni of the National Police’s Criminal Investigation Agency. The arson suspects were being investigated in connection with 89 forest and land fire cases across five provinces on the island of Borneo and four on Sumatra, he said. Suspects face penalties ranging from fines to prison terms of up to 15 years, he said.

He said most of the suspects were accused of deliberately burning land to clear areas for plantations at lower cost. Investigators were still tracing financial records to determine whether companies financed or ordered the land clearing, signaling the probe could expand beyond those arrested.

Indonesian President Prabowo Subianto flew on Saturday to Central Kalimantan province, where more than 18,700 acres have burned, to encourage authorities to get the haze cloud under control.

Prabowo promised government resources required to contain the fires, including helicopters and water pumps, and vowed to hold accountable any companies found to have contributed to the fires.

Smoke from the fires on Sunday blanketed parts of Borneo, the world’s third-largest island, shared by Indonesia, Malaysia, and Brunei. Meanwhile, Malaysia has endured severe smoke from the fires, with its eastern state of Sarawak the hardest hit. One district recorded “very unhealthy” air quality on Friday, while eight others posted unhealthy readings, prompting the closure of nearly 600 schools.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Echoing Trump, right-wing leaders talk tough in Latin America

Push influence across the region

By Emma Bubola, Annie Correal, and Ana Ionova
NEW YORK TIMES

BUENOS AIRES — Dancing, beating his chest, and hugging Flávio Bolsonaro, the right-wing candidate seeking to become Brazil’s next leader, President Javier Milei of Argentina launched into a tirade against Brazil’s current president, calling him a “thief” and “socialist trash.”

Milei was seeking to aid Bolsonaro, who is running against President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva in this October’s election, but that brash display of camaraderie in São Paulo came with consequences. After the event last month, Brazil recalled its ambassador to Argentina, generating the most serious rift in decades between South America’s two largest economies.

The episode was only the latest example of the personal alliances and international endorsements reshaping Latin American politics, as right-wing candidates win elections across the region.

Sharing hard-line policy proposals, campaign mascots, and videos of themselves together, they are sending a message of right-wing unity. And, borrowing heavily from President Trump’s playbook, they are openly stepping into neighbors’ elections.

The ascent of right-wing leaders comes as many Latin American voters are frustrated with soaring crime and insecurity, and with what they see as left-wing leaders’ failure to deal with these and other issues, including the economy and immigration.

Like-minded leaders banding together is nothing new on the right or the left, as in the long alliance between Venezuela and Cuba. But this new crop of conservative leaders — many of them political newcomers — is promoting a new, brazen, often social media-powered version of this dynamic.

“There were always political preferences, but they remained veiled,” said José Alfredo Graça Lima, a veteran diplomat and vice president of the Brazilian Center for International Relations. “Now they are explicit.”

At the center of the right-wing alliance is Washington, seeking to lead by strengthening ties with conservative leaders, including through the Shield of the Americas, a new security alliance against drug traffickers and organized crime.

Aligning with the Trump administration can yield rewards, such as financial bailouts and fast-tracked military or disaster aid. Yet analysts warn that this alignment-first diplomacy carries potential risks, too.

The breach with Lula, for instance, could affect Argentina’s relationship with Brazil, its main trading partner, as Milei tries to stabilize his country’s economy.

From Colombia to Peru to Bolivia and Chile, the right-wing candidates that won recent elections differ in major ways, and some triumphed by razor-thin margins.

But they espoused a common

GUADALUPE PARDO/ASSOCIATED PRESS/POOL

Argentina’s president, Javier Milei, is part of a wave of conservative leaders reshaping Latin American politics.

message. Many pledged to take on rising violent crime and to bring economic recovery — pressing issues in many voters’ daily lives.

They also adopted strident ideological language. The newly elected Colombian president, Abelardo De La Espriella, has promised to “disembowel” the left, and Milei has said he wants to defeat the “cancer of socialism.”

Whether in opposition to criminals, immigration or “woke” ideology — “wokismo” or “cultura woke” — the right-wing leaders are drawing from a shared set of symbols and terms, often echoing Trump and the US right.

They invoke one another, too, in tactics like adopting the national soccer jersey as campaign attire, or imagery like a giant pair of scissors, a nod to Milei’s chainsaw, his symbol of government cuts.

Aided by social media, they are also finding novel ways to weigh in on each other’s elections.

On the eve of Colombia’s first-round vote in May, De La Espriella posted online a video call with Ecuador’s conservative president, who said he would lift tariffs on Colombian products in light of the candidate’s positions.

The move was swiftly denounced by Colombian officials as election interference, but it showed voters that De La Espriella had powerful friends.

Experts say the Shield of the Americas and its military arm could limit their own effectiveness by excluding Latin America’s biggest countries, Mexico and Brazil, which are run by leftist leaders.

Data center backlash bursts into midterms

By Shane Goldmacher
NEW YORK TIMES

The fight over data centers is suddenly at the epicenter of the midterm elections.

One new ad in Texas begins with someone typing into a chatbot, “Why is my electric bill going up?” Another in Ohio blames one of the state’s Republican senators for a proliferation of data centers, calling them “a total scam.” And in top House battlegrounds in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania, the Democratic challengers are all running ads against the server warehouses powering the artificial intelligence boom.

Data centers have become a quickly immersing fault-line in the broader fight over an AI revolution that is remaking the global economy and threatening to disrupt the job market. Now politicians are racing to tap into the backlash — or inoculate themselves — as political strategists in both parties described the issue as an unusually fast-moving force that is already reshaping races for the House, the Senate, and governors’ mansions.

“It’s very much a bottom up, organic movement,” said Anna Greenberg, a veteran Democratic pollster, who said that while people’s views on data centers were largely tied to how close they live to them, the facilities were also becoming symbols of the excesses of Silicon Valley.

“Data centers are a physical manifestation,” she said. “Billionaires are building them, and it feeds into all of the Big Tech skepticism that is there. It’s very symbolic of everybody’s issues with AI.”

There are signs that the emerging data center debate is scrambling the usual partisan divisions.

So far, Democrats have chiefly been the ones racing to harness voter anger about data centers over rising electricity prices, water use, and mistrust of the tech sector. They aim to punish Republicans for cozying up to industry by approving many of these projects.

Some Republicans are now using “data center” as an epithet, and casting themselves as the real opponents of corporate tax breaks and unfettered construction. Last week, Mike Rogers, the Republican nominee for Senate in the key swing state of Michigan, said that he supports a one-year moratorium on data center construction.

Polls show a revolt brewing against data centers. A Gallup poll conducted in March showed 71 percent opposed local construction of the centers, and a summer survey from the Annenberg Public Policy Center of the University of Pennsylvania showed that the number of people opposing new data centers in their areas had risen by 12 percentage points since February and March.

JUNI KRISWANTO/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

FUTURISTIC FUN — Children played at the recently opened Space and Time Cube Surabaya immersive digital art space in Surabaya, Indonesia, on Sunday. The site includes tunnels, futuristic 3D rooms, zero-gravity art installations, interactive light displays, and a fantasy cinema.

World’s breadbaskets pounded by war, weather, trade spats

Global supply of wheat in danger

By Somini Sengupta
NEW YORK TIMES

Instant noodles. Hot chapatis. Sliced bread.

Wheat is at the heart of the modern diet, and this year, it is facing an accumulation of modern dangers. The breadbaskets of the world are getting pummeled by drone strikes and devilish weather, nudging prices higher amid already soaring food costs in the wake of the Iran war.

Heat and drought have diminished harvests in some of the biggest wheat-producing countries, including the United States, which is expected to have its worst wheat harvest in a half-century, spiking prices. Poor countries that agreed to buy American wheat under the threat of Trump tariffs could be stuck paying abnormally high prices.

The Black Sea, a crucial passage for the global wheat trade, is an active theater of the Russia-Ukraine war, while the Houthis militia’s attacks on shipping in the Red Sea have already forced grain shipments to take a longer, more expensive route around South Africa.

Beyond that, a supercharged El Nino further threatens water levels in the Panama Canal, while drought has reduced water levels to perilously low levels in transit routes like the Rhine and Danube rivers in Europe, raising transportation costs. All this at a time when the global atmosphere is hotter than normal because of a century of fossil fuel burning, threatening the livelihoods of small farmers.

DAVID GUTTENFELDER/NEW YORK TIMES/FILE

Ukrainian soldiers patrolled in an unharvested wheat field in 2022. In 2026, global wheat production faces many dangers.

The simultaneous troubles reveal the risks inherent in the global food system today. Only a few crops, like wheat, provide most of the world’s calories. Relatively few governments dominate the export of wheat, including Russia, Canada, the United States, Ukraine, and the European Union. Their customers are mainly low-income countries that no longer grow much of the food their people eat.

“The system we currently have in place depends on three things: seamless trade, cheap energy, stable climate,” said Evan Fraser, a professor who studies the global food system at the University of Guelph in Ontario.

“Today, it seems none of these assumptions are met.”

Few things are as politically potent as the price of bread, and wheat prices were already at a three-year high in July, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization. The United Nations agency has warned of higher prices later this year.

The saving grace is that the world had a bumper crop of wheat last year, and global stocks remain strong. The risk, said Monika Tothova, an economist who specializes in commodities at the Food and Agriculture Organization, is that “several sources of uncertainty begin to reinforce one another.”

“A combination of El Nino-related weather impacts across major exporters, renewed con-shipping routes would have implications far beyond wheat production itself,” she said.

Russia and Ukraine together account for nearly a third of the wheat that the world buys. This year, just as harvests began, their grain shipments have nearly ground to a halt.

In recent weeks, Russia and Ukraine have stepped up their attacks on each other’s grain export terminals and ships in the Black Sea, a waterway they share to get their goods out to the world.

Wildfires this summer spared the wheat belt of France, the EU’s largest wheat producer. But the heat has not.

France expects lower yields because of record heat this summer, according to government projections. Germany’s main farmers group said Tuesday that yields were down for several crops, including grain, because of drought and heat.

In July, the European trade group for agricultural commodities, Cocal, issued a special bulletin, estimating lower grain yields of approximately 315 million tons this year, compared with 341 million tons in 2025, for the Continent and for Britain.

Australia, also a major wheat exporter, planted fewer acres of wheat because of high fertilizer costs, stemming from the Strait of Hormuz closure.

The US is about to have its worst wheat harvest since 1970, largely because of a terrible drought in the Great Plains, the US Department of Agriculture estimated in its latest report this month. American farmers had devoted fewer acres to wheat, and yields per acre were also down.

Rising prices of imported wheat put enormous pressure on governments that are forced to buy high and then help subsidize the costs to keep bread prices within the reach of their people.

Then there are President Trump’s tariffs. To try to avoid additional higher rates, some wheat-importing emerging economies, such as Bangladesh, agreed to buy substantial amounts of US wheat.

That means they are obliged to pay whatever price US wheat goes for this year, even if it is substantially higher than what other countries are offering.

Analysts in Bangladesh have denounced the deal as unfair.

The perils facing the world’s breadbaskets come at a time when an El Nino, a naturally recurring weather pattern, is raising the risks of extreme weather for farmers in many parts of the world.

The last major El Nino event, in 2015 and 2016, worsened food insecurity for an estimated 60 million to 100 million people, the World Food Program estimated.

This time, the World Food Program says, it could expand the ranks of those who are unable to meet their daily food needs to 274 million, up from 225 million today.

“It is naive to think we can rely on a food system built for a different era,” Fraser said.

HENNION & WALSH & A HUMAN CONNECTION

Hennion & Walsh was made for people like you. People who have earned everything they have by putting in the hours. People who know the importance of speaking to the right people at the right time. That’s why when you call us, we pick up the phone ourselves. There’s no need to speak to a machine, or spend hours searching for answers online.

We want to hear from you as often as you’d like to talk to us, because the more we understand your needs, the more likely it is that we can help you achieve your financial goals, so you can build the life you want.

Why do we offer all this & more? You’ve earned it.

To learn more or to request a free, no obligation second opinion on your stock market or fixed income investments, get in touch.

Call us at (800) 279-5279

to get a free second opinion on your investments or visit hennionandwalsh.com

HENNION & WALSH
ASSET MANAGEMENT

US driver wins Freedom 250 race in D.C.

►GRAND PRIX
Continued from Page A1

building adorned with President Trump’s scowling visage, and the National Archives, where the Constitution is held, before slicing through the Mall and banking around the Smithsonian’s Air and Space Museum, finally rounding out the track along the curve of the National Museum of the American Indian.

The auto race was the final lap for the White House-backed organization Freedom 250, which has orchestrated many of the other splashy semiquincentennial events this summer including the UFC fights on the White House lawn, the Great American State Fair, and, most recently, the Patriot Games.

Freedom 250 has often been criticized for pandering more to Trump’s tastes than the nation as a whole as America celebrates its 250th birthday. The IndyCar race — known as the Freedom 250 Grand Prix — however, seemed to attract the most wide-reaching audience yet. Whereas most of the other events have been awash in MAGA hats, at the Grand Prix political merchandise was distinctly rare, replaced instead with racing gear.

People representing IndyCar were keen to distance themselves from any notion that the race should be seen as political.

“To see the people on the National Mall, if you’re out there, everybody had a smile on their face, didn’t matter if you were Democrat [or] Republican here,” Bud Denker, president of Penske Corp. and the Grand Prix’s chairman, told reporters after the race. “It just shows you in this sport, we can bring things together, can’t we?”

Even the Canadian Embassy, amid a start-stop tariff battle unfolding between Trump and the country’s prime minister, hosted a watch party on its rooftop directly overlooking the track.

The phrase “once-in-a-lifetime” was used often in the lead-up to the race by everyone from the drivers, to politicians, to fans supportive of using Washington’s iconography as a motorsports backdrop.

Denker spent a year lobbying for this event on Capitol Hill, always with a large poster board of the proposed race course in tow. He told the Globe Thursday that he has lived in Washington nearly full time recently and met with people as obscure as the House’s sergeant at arms and the architect of the Capitol, along with senior members of Trump’s Cabinet including Interior Secretary Doug Burgum and Transportation Secretary Sean Duffy.

“I took my poster board to over 100 meetings,” he said. “They called me the poster boy because I’d walk in all these security [checkpoints], I’d push my poster board through.”

Denker added that he received positive feedback on both sides of the political aisle about the event, especially because the race was being run as a nonprofit that will invest some proceeds into D.C. charities.

Trump, who has a recent history with auto racing and a longtime friendship with IndyCar owner Roger Penske, credited himself for giving the race the speed boost it needed to roar into reality.

“Roger told me they had been trying to do it for 20 years and he’d come down — I think he said he was down 211 times to try and get it done,” the president said in a pre-race interview with Fox Sports. “And when he came to see Trump, it got done in about 15 minutes. And it’s turned out to be much bigger than we ever even thought possible.”

To be sure, everything about the spectacle was big: its corporate sponsors (Delta Air Lines, Shell, Boeing, Fox); the trophy (75 pounds of crystal made in the shape of the Capitol dome); the amount of laps (147 to make 250 miles).

The Spaniard Alex Palou, a four-time IndyCar champion widely considered the sport’s best driver, predicted Thursday that the sheer length of the race would create “chaos.”

“More laps and more pit stops means chaos, which is a good thing for fans. Not as good for the drivers because we like simple and boring races,” he told the Globe. “But yeah, it’s just gonna create a lot of passing, a lot of drama.”

ROBERTO SCHMIDT/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

Spectators at a watch party at the Canadian Embassy observed President Trump taking a lap on the course before the IndyCar Freedom 250 Grand Prix began. Right: Fans watched a military fly-over before the race. Below: Spectators took in the action.

After an echoing, operatic rendition of the national anthem and a lap of honor by Trump in the presidential limousine, the IndyCar drivers started their engines in unison with a rhythmic hum. Then, there was a series of pops as wheels began to spin for the warm-up laps, leaving a heavy smell of gasoline hanging in the air.

When the green flag came out shortly afterward, a whole new level of speed was achieved. The cars flew by leaving nothing but a flash of color, a rumbling beneath spectators’ feet, and a hellish revving sound. At top speed, they resembled missiles more than motor cars.

It should perhaps come as no surprise, then, that four drivers were unable to finish the race, and many others crashed into some portion of the 60,000 feet of temporary walls.

In the end, it was Kyle Kirk-

NICK WASS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

wood, one of only eight American drivers in the Grand Prix, who crossed the checkered line first after leading the pack for 128 of the 147 laps.

“It felt good to dominate out there, I’m not going to lie. That was a really good moment. I’m a fellow Florida guy — I live up in Jupiter — so it’s cool to see him down here,” Kirkwood said of Trump shortly after his victory.

Even the second-place driver, a Dane named Christian Lundgaard, admitted after the race “it’s fitting that an American won.”

Julian E.J. Sorapuru can be reached at julian.sorapuru@globe.com. Follow him on X @JulianSorapuru.

SAUL LOEB/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

Jeffries and Kushner meet privately as midterm attacks fly

Representative Hakeem Jeffries of New York, the House minority leader, met privately in recent weeks with Jared Kushner, President Trump’s son-in-law and top outside adviser, and discussed potential areas of common ground, according to five people with knowledge of the meeting.

The rare engagement was held in a private space in New York City, offered up by a mutual friend of the two men, according to two people with knowledge of the meeting and a third who was briefed on it. They and others were granted anonymity to discuss a meeting about which they were not authorized to speak publicly.

Through aides, neither man would comment on the session, which was described by one person with knowledge of it as a broad conversation on a range of topics. Still, its timing underscored that those around Trump were well aware of the likelihood of a Democratic-led House, and trying to foster as much of a working relationship as possible before any change. Jeffries is in line to be the speaker, were Democrats to win the majority.

Democrats and the president have been savaging each other on the campaign trail with increasing fury as the midterm elections approach, and as Republicans are fighting to retain their thin House and Senate majorities.

Trump has called Jeffries a “thug,” and at a May campaign event referred to him as a “low IQ” person who had inspired him to deride Democrats as the “Dumocrats.” Jeffries routinely suggests that Trump is not only extreme but corrupt, vowing that Democrats would “hold the crooks accountable” if they won control.

Representative Hakeem Jeffries (left) of New York, the House minority leader, met privately with Jared Kushner, President Trump’s son-in-law and top outside adviser, to discuss a range of topics.

The private get-together was described by one of the people as a catch-up for Kushner and Jeffries. The two men have stayed in touch since they worked together on a criminal justice bill midway through Trump’s first term.

During the recent meeting, the pair discussed housing, immigration, and the high cost of living as potential areas of common ground. Kushner suggested that Jeffries should meet with the White House chief of staff, Susie Wiles, two people with knowledge of the meeting said.

The likelihood of any compromises between the White House and Democrats on those issues seems remote.

NEW YORK TIMES

Father of USS Lincoln sailor is arrested by Border Patrol

When Luis Manuel Aviles was arrested by immigration authorities, his son was entering his ninth month on the USS Abraham Lincoln with the Navy — a vessel that set a US military record for uninterrupted time at sea, stirring concerns about supply shortages and deteriorating mental health among soldiers.

Aviles, 48, was arrested after leaving his house to take his car to the mechanic, according to his wife, Argelia Aviles. She said her husband, a handyman in Key West, Fla., has a permit to work in the United States. Originally from Nicaragua, he has lived in the United States for 19 years.

Aviles’s arrest comes as the Trump administration rolls back immigration protections for military families to pursue its mass deportation agenda, detaining at least dozens of parents and spouses of active-duty US troops.

At least six family members have been deported and one self-deported, the AP found in the first accounting of such detentions, which the government does not track.

The Department of Homeland Security said in a statement that Border Patrol agents arrested Luis Aviles on Saturday in Key West and that he will remain in ICE custody while the government seeks to deport him.

“Having a family member in the military is not a free pass to violate our nation’s laws,” the department said Sunday.

The Pentagon referred all questions to the Navy. The Navy didn’t immediately respond to an emailed request for comment on Sunday afternoon.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The midterms of 2026 feel like 2006 all over again

WASHINGTON — The war in the Middle East is increasingly unpopular. So is the president as his numbers dip perilously — a common development in the sixth year of a presidency. Congressional Republicans are embroiled in unsavory scandals. Americans are shelling out big bucks for gas while economic anxiety runs high.

The grim backdrop for November’s midterm elections has created a steep challenge for Republicans and opportunities for Democrats that look much the same as those they encountered in 2006. Back then, congressional Republicans faced the voters at the midpoint of President George W. Bush’s second term, with the public roiled by the war in Iraq, high fuel prices, and a series of ugly accusations against members of the GOP majority on Capitol Hill.

“It is striking,” said Senator Chuck Schumer of New York, the Democratic minority leader and chief architect of his party’s Senate campaign strategy this year and two decades ago. “The analogy is amazing.”

The parallels are not perfect, since politics and campaigns have both changed radically over 20 years. But the comparisons are instructive, as officials in both parties stare down the final months of an election that will determine who controls Congress for the remainder of President Trump’s term.

“This is 2006 2.0,” said Rahm Emanuel, who in 2006 was an ambitious Democratic House member from Illinois and Schumer’s counterpart across the Capitol as the head of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. “The similarities are eerie.”

Emanuel and Schumer both have good reason to look back fondly on 2006, when Democrats triumphed in a blue wave.

Exceeding expectations that year, Democrats picked up six seats in the Senate, taking control of the chamber. In the House, where the Republican majority seemed to have exhausted itself after a dozen years, Democrats gained 31 seats and installed Nancy Pelosi, who is now retiring, as the first woman speaker.

NEW YORK TIMES

Angry Ohio voters could turn their state purple again

NORTH RIDGEVILLE, Ohio — Across Ohio, a state that receded from the nation’s political battle zone as its voting patterns turned an ever deeper shade of red, signs of discontent this year are everywhere.

In packed public forums, residents rage about data center projects. In grocery store aisles, shoppers lament to cashiers how little they can get for $50. In the soybean and corn fields, farmers express anxiety and pessimism. The basics of life and business have gotten punishingly expensive, and many have come to doubt that relief is coming anytime soon.

“It’s all dumpy. Businesses are closing, the roads look like crap,” Kim Hall, 59, said as she shopped at a Dollar General in North Ridgeville, Ohio, on Wednesday. “Grocery prices are outrageous, and I can barely afford to live.”

Frustration like hers is evident in every region and demographic in the state, and it’s why Ohio may be up for grabs in the 2026 midterms. With the general election less than 75 days away, polls show dead heats for governor and a coveted Senate seat. Enough congressional seats are in play for either party to swing control of the House. Come November, the state that once bragged “So goes Ohio, so goes the nation” will find out if it is truly inching back toward purple.

NEW YORK TIMES

US envoy clarifies comments that contradicted Trump

BEIRUT — The US special envoy to Syria and ambassador to Turkey on Sunday walked back his comments from two days ago that Israel “still” occupies the Golan Heights in violation of United Nations resolutions, remarks that went against President Trump’s position on the disputed territory.

Israel captured the Golan Heights from Syria in the 1967 Mideast war and annexed it in 1981. The UN and most of the international community consider the territory occupied Syrian land and does not recognize Israel’s annexation of it.

In 2019, Trump recognized Israeli sovereignty over the territory, reversing decades of US policy.

Ambassador Tom Barrack on Friday said that Israel “still” occupies the territory in an interview with Lebanese-Australian entrepreneur Mario Nawfal.

Barrack now says that was a description of the territory’s historical status, “not an endorsement of the United Nations’ position” on the Golan.

“United States policy on the Golan was set by President Trump in 2019 and is unchanged,” he said in a statement to the Associated Press on Sunday.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Vt. traffic stop casts light on Border Patrol program

►BORDER
Continued from Page A1

were specifically designed to prevent situations like Jimenez’s July 19 arrest.

“We have been saying for over a decade that Operation Stonegarden is fundamentally incompatible with Vermont’s” policies, said Will Lambek, an organizer for Vermont-based Migrant Justice, which has advocated for Jimenez. “It’s a real shame that it’s taking the deportation of a community member for other people to wake up to that fact.”

The incident has already led Costella’s agency to reconsider its participation in Operation Stonegarden — and set off a series of investigations.

After Migrant Justice lodged a complaint with the Chittenden County Sheriff’s Department days after the detention, the department initiated an internal review of Costella’s actions, temporarily reassigned him to other duties, and referred the matter to the Vermont Criminal Justice Council, which oversees compliance with Fair and Impartial Policing policies.

Costella’s boss, Chittenden County Sheriff Daniel Gamelin, subsequently told Vermont Public he suspended the department’s participation in Stonegarden. In an email to the Globe, he said that suspension would last through the internal review.

Gamelin declined interview requests from the Globe, citing advice from counsel. Costella did not respond to requests for comment. A spokesperson for US Customs and Border Protection referred questions to the sheriff’s department.

One prominent politician, though, has publicly condemned Costella’s actions. Speaking at an unrelated press conference on Wednesday, Republican Governor Phil Scott said he believed the situation was “a clear violation” of the Fair and Impartial Policing policies.

Scott noted Vermont had “committed to not working to identify proactively ... some who may be here illegally or not.” But he also defended Vermont’s participation in Stonegarden, saying there are “many good parts” of the program, including helping federal law enforcement

MIGRANT JUSTICE

Sergeant Scott Costella’s body camera recorded his assistance in the arrest of Alex Jimenez (right), a 22-year-old dairy farmworker, in Berkshire, Vt., on July 19.

combat drug trafficking.

The incident had immediate political ramifications.

Migrant Justice publicized the case on the eve of Vermont’s Aug. 11 primary election, releasing body camera footage and other public records it had obtained related to Jimenez’s arrest. At the time, Gamelin was facing a challenge in the Democratic primary for another four-year term from a liberal opponent, Kevin Bloom, who had called for the dismantling of ICE.

Gamelin quickly released a statement reinforcing his commitment to his department’s Fair and Impartial Policing policy — and promising to get to the bottom of the situation.

“A man who was living and working in this state has been separated from his partner and his family,” the sheriff said of Jimenez. “This is serious, and I am not going to talk around it.”

Gamelin easily won the next day, defeating Bloom 49 to 37 percent. He faces no opposition in the general election.

Lambek said the timing of Migrant Justice’s release was not politically motivated and the organization held off on publicizing it at Jimenez’s request, until he was safely out of the country and no longer risked retaliation for speaking out. He was deported Aug. 10, the day before the Vermont primary.

Speaking from his hometown of Las Margaritas, in the state of Chiapas, Jimenez said he entered the US in 2023 “to see a new land” and to send money back home to his family. After a stint in Indiana, he spent close to two years working 12 hours a day, six days a week on a dairy farm near Vermont’s border with Canada.

Jimenez said he’d generally avoid leaving the farm, for fear of being caught and deported, but on that day, he traveled to a store with the driver to buy bottled water for a friend.

On their way back, public records show, Sergeant Costella noticed the Chevy Spark was missing its front license plate and pulled the driver over in the town of Berkshire. After summoning the Border Patrol agents, Costella used body language to ask Jimenez for his driver’s license, and Jimenez turned over his Mexican identification card. At other times, he used Google Translate on his phone to communicate with the pair.

“That works,” Costella said of the ID.

State policies bar police from requiring passengers to provide identification, unless they’re suspected of committing a crime. The policies also forbid holding people for, or transferring them to, federal agents without a judicial warrant. Nor can Vermont police share information with federal immigration authorities, unless there’s a threat to public or officer safety — and other state or local police are unable to help.

In his initial account of the day’s events, Costella wrote he’d asked for Border Patrol backup because he’d been alone on a “back country road” with unknown subjects. But records obtained by Migrant Justice show that an attorney for the sheriff’s department later advised adding the words “officer safety” to Costella’s account.

That, according to Lambek, was “a very transparent ploy to try to justify the actions within the bounds of [state] policy.” In combination with Costella’s use of a personal cellphone to call Border Patrol, it suggests an effort to avoid accountability, Lambek said.

“These are not the actions of somebody who is fearing for their safety or fearing for their life,” he said. “These are the actions of somebody looking for Border Patrol to come to the scene.”

Christopher Brickell, executive director of the Vermont Criminal Justice Council, said he could not comment on an investigation his organization might review. But generally speaking, he said, “There would be no reason for a Vermont officer to summon a federal officer to a motor vehicle stop related to civil violations,” such as a missing license plate.

The incident also raises the question of why an officer would be patrolling a dirt road so far from his jurisdiction. Chittenden County, which includes the city of Burlington, is not on the international border; its headquarters is nearly 60 miles away from the town of Berkshire.

The answer is that Operation Stonegarden, which is administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, allows local agencies that are not near the border to participate. Their officers operate like a kind of freelancer: They sign up for upcoming shifts and then report to a designated Border Patrol station for work, which can include patrolling highways, rural roads, or even waterways.

The Globe previously reported the Chittenden County Sheriff’s Department received $218,855 from Stonegarden the previous year, more than one-quarter of the statewide total. Since then, according to Vermont State Police spokesperson Adam Silverman, payments from Stonegarden have decreased significantly, from $760,000 in 2024 to a projected $25,000 this year, for reasons that are not clear.

Records obtained by Seven Days newspaper show the Chittenden County Sheriff’s Department has conducted 147 Stonegarden shifts since the start of 2025 — 105 of which were handled by Costella.

In an interview with the Globe last fall, Gamelin said Stonegarden allowed his deputies to earn extra money helping federal agents look for people crossing the border “carrying dope, guns, that sort of stuff.” But he emphasized local officers were not seeking out people already in the country illegally.

“So if we’re stopping a car and we believe there are people in the car [without legal status], we just write a traffic ticket and let them go,” the sheriff said at the time.

The department has, however, faced scrutiny for its actions before. In 2023, it agreed to pay a $25,000 settlement to another Mexican farmworker following a strikingly similar situation several years earlier, in which a deputy contacted Border Patrol during a traffic stop, leading to that man’s deportation. Game-lin was not sheriff at the time of 2019 stop.

Lia Ernst, legal director for the ACLU of Vermont, said there’s a fundamental conflict between state and federal policy. She pointed to federal requirements for Stonegarden that require participating agencies to “honor requests for cooperation,” including information sharing and short-term detention of undocumented people — both barred by Vermont’s Fair and Impartial Policing policies.

“They’re either violating the [Vermont policies] or they’re violating conditions of participation,” Ernst said. “But you can’t be doing both at once.”

Brickell, a former police chief, acknowledged the contradictory guidance could be “confusing” to officers on the ground and emphasized it’s the responsibility of agency heads to make clear they must abide by state policies even when working a federal Stonegarden detail.

Brickell also questioned whether a program designed to beef up border security after the 9/11 terrorist attacks makes sense decades later, now that the US Border Patrol has significantly more resources.

“Is there still a need for Vermont officers to participate in such a program?” he asked.

Ernst has long warned Stonegarden could create “cozy relationships” between federal immigration authorities and local police. Documents obtained by Migrant Justice appear to bear that out.

Soon after Border Patrol led Jimenez away in cuffs, Costella texted the federal agents again — this time to let them know he was headed to a local Subway sandwich shop.

“[Y]ou guys need anything for chow?” he asked.

“Nope but can you give me the [vehicle] info,” a Border Patrol agent responded.

Costella quickly complied.

Paul Heints can be reached at paul.heints@globe.com. Follow him on X @paulheints.

No longer answering the call in Medford

►MEDFORD
Continued from Page A1

scorched-earth style of labor and employee relations.

Lungo-Koehn vociferously rejects these characterizations.

And, unsurprisingly, she has a different take on how and why the city ultimately decided to go with a different ambulance provider in recent months. In a phone interview earlier this summer, she said Armstrong Ambulance had declined to abide by the provisions of their contract, a sign, Lungo-Koehn said, the company had grown too comfortable in Medford.

Given that, she said, she recalled thinking that her administration needed “to figure out if Armstrong is the right fit for us still.”

Under state law, the procurement of ambulance services is not subject to the bidding process. That means communities can award ambulance contracts to whatever proposal is deemed to be in the best interests of the municipality.

Armstrong, the mayor said, had political connections in the city, but she was adamant: “I just don’t contract with people because they’re friends with somebody, I contract with the company that I think is going to do the best job in the city of Medford.” Now, she says, she’s thrilled with the city’s new ambulance provider, Cataldo Ambulance Service.

The discord has its genesis in a contract stipulation that Armstrong provide an annual $75,000 payment to the city. The clause came with restrictions: The money had to be used for the city’s 911 dispatch center, and Medford had to provide receipts proving it was used for that purpose, according to a copy obtained by the Globe from Raymond.

From Raymond’s point of view, Medford had not collected the $75,000 payment for six years. From the city’s, Armstrong did not pay it, in violation of the contract. (The city and Armstrong entered a contract with the $75,000 provision in 2017, under a previous mayoral administration, and the pact was renewed again under Lungo-Koehn in 2022, according to a city spokesperson.)

Then, last year, Medford wanted those missing payments — all of them. On April 18, 2025,

‘I contract with the company that I think is going to do the best job in the city of Medford.’

MEDFORD MAYOR
BREANNA LUNGO-KOEHN

a city official emailed Raymond a request for $450,000, according to communications between Raymond and city authorities reviewed by the Globe.

The request came after city officials developed a plan to renovate the 911 dispatch center and upgrade antiquated emergency response equipment, according to a city spokesperson. Those improvements were estimated to cost north of $200,000, and police and dispatch staffers thought the annual $75,000 reimbursement clause in the contract “could be used as a funding source,” the spokesperson said in an email.

Raymond felt his hands were tied. By his reading, he couldn’t give them that amount of money without violating Medicare anti-kickback laws.

“The contract doesn’t allow for me to do that,” he said.

The clause, Raymond acknowledged, is an outlier. Medford was the only municipality Armstrong served that had it; its other communities in Eastern Massachusetts include Arlington, Waltham, Woburn, Stoneham, and Saugus.

The fee is a remnant of a bygone era, Raymond said, when Armstrong included such provisions to get a leg up on the competition.

Other ambulance contracts, including those in neighboring Somerville and Malden, both of which have an agreement with Cataldo, don’t include such a provision, and neither does Lynn. The current pact between Medford and Cataldo doesn’t either, nor does the contract Cambridge has with its provider, Professional Ambulance & Oxygen Service.

Raymond’s interpretation of the Medford contract was that such payments could not be made for more than a single year’s time, meaning if the city did not move to collect the money within a year, there would be no clawbacks.

These were not minor points for Raymond. Without proof all the money was spent on 911 services, he worried both parties could be in danger of violating the federal Medicare anti-kickback statutes that govern the provision of health care services.

Christopher A. Parrella, an attorney and council member for the Massachusetts Bar Association Health Law Section, said there are four different anti-kickback statutes that apply to health care providers in Massachusetts.

Typically, the central focus of those laws is whether money “or some other thing of value” is being used to buy clinical judgment, patient judgment, or referrals. Investigators probing alleged kickback violations typically focus on the money trail, he said.

“That’s where the rubber meets the road,” he said.

The Medicare anti-kickback statute has legal carveouts known as safe harbors for things such as referrals, but strict criteria must be met in order for any such deal to be legal, experts say.

“People have to be careful to structure the transaction to fall within the safe harbor, under the regulation,” said Renée M. Landers, a professor at Suffolk University Law School who specializes in health and biomedical law. “This is why lawyers get paid the big bucks, to look at these things.”

Raymond never lived in Medford, but he was stationed there as a first responder for decades. It’s where he came of age professionally, he says. He knew its streets and people.

But that was before the friction over the contract with Lungo-Koehn’s administration.

“She got mad because she didn’t want to follow the rules,” Raymond alleged over coffee recently at a Somerville cafe. “She wanted a slush fund, and when someone stood up to her and said ‘no,’ she took great offense.”

On April 29, 2025, his company delivered a $150,000 check, covering the then-current fiscal year and the previous one. Six months later, in a new fiscal year, in November, Armstrong made another payment of $75,000 to the city, bringing the total to $225,000, according to a presentation made to the Medford City Council.

Then, in December, Lungo-Koehn informed him in an email that Raymond “left me with no choice at that time but to start conversations with other amulance [sic] company(s).”

Raymond is convinced his resistance to forking over the full $450,000 is what spurred the change, saying Armstrong had served the city well for years. He said he did not pursue litigation against Medford because he did not want to conduct business litigiously.

PAT GREENHOUSE/GLOBE STAFF

Medford ended its contract with Armstrong Ambulance and hired Cataldo Ambulance Service as its new provider.

But some Medford officials feel differently. They viewed the lack of $75,000 payments as Armstrong playing by its own set of rules.

“The 2022 contract clearly laid out the payment structure to the City as well as other reporting and training requirements, and Armstrong just refused to abide by the terms of the contract that they signed,” said Medford Police Chief Jack Buckley in a statement to the Globe. “The switch to Cataldo has been seamless and I’m happy with how operations have been conducted so far.”

Lungo-Koehn, a 46-year-old Democrat in her fourth term, said she was hearing from public safety officials in Medford that Armstrong’s response time to some 911 calls was lagging, a claim Raymond rejects as inaccurate. She also said too many Armstrong ambulances were responding to calls in Arlington, suggesting the company had spread itself too thin to properly serve Medford residents.

“I think Armstrong took on more than it could chew,” she said.

A City Hall memo alleged Armstrong was sometimes too slow to respond to medical emergencies.

But Raymond said Armstrong, which has about 375 employees, had an average call response time in Medford of four-and-a-half minutes.

“Never once was I called into City Hall for them to say ‘You’re doing a bad job,’” Raymond said.

Cataldo’s average response time since January in Medford is four minutes, according to a spokesperson for Lungo-Koehn. Cataldo did not respond to messages seeking comment.

Lungo-Koehn’s administration has battled a raft of litigation from employees in recent years. And Teamsters Local 25 is often a sparring partner of the mayor, who has said she is trying to modernize the city’s operations, bring accountability to the municipal workforce, and break up a good-old-boys network.

Raymond, for one, is convinced that at least part of the acrimony over the last ambulance contract with Medford was due to the fact that Armstrong is a union shop with Local 25 members.

“This is a personal thing,” Raymond said. “Not in the city’s best interest.”

Danny McDonald can be reached at daniel.mcdonald@globe.com. Follow him @Danny_McDonald.

INBOX

One verdict in Clancy case: Postpartum care is at the heart of the matter

In a tragedy such as this, the crucible of a trial imposes cruelty, not justice

The ongoing prosecution of Lindsay Clancy highlights a devastating failure in how our legal system handles severe psychiatric crises. While the loss in this case is an undeniable tragedy, continuing to subject an obviously suffering individual to repetitive trauma through the criminal justice system is not justice — it is cruelty.

Medical professionals widely recognize postpartum psychosis as a profound break from reality, not a moral failure. When a person experiences a medical and psychiatric emergency of this magnitude, their actions are dictated by severe illness, not criminal intent. Forcing a severely broken individual through the grueling gears of a trial does nothing to heal the community or prevent future tragedies.

True justice requires empathy and medical intervention, not vengeance. We must stop using criminal courts to punish individuals who desperately needed intensive medical intervention long before a crisis occurred. It is time for our legal framework to evolve, prioritize medical reality over punishment, and stop inflicting further trauma on those who are already profoundly broken.

MAGGIE THAYER
Phoenix

The writer is a certified physician assistant specializing in psychiatry. The views expressed here are her own.

Mothers and fathers alike need postpartum support

Re “‘Mothers get lost in the shuffle’: The Clancy trial highlights gaps in postpartum mental health care” (Editorial, Aug. 21): Certainly improving the availability of medical and psychiatric care is essential in supporting a mother. But although much is needed for women’s postpartum care, medical and psychiatric research has discovered that fathers, too, can suffer from postpartum depression. Both parents may need intervention.

As a retired pediatrician experienced in doing 4-month visits and volunteering with a health advocacy group, I strongly suggest that the 4-month well-child visit be expanded and renamed the 4-month family visit. This would provide an opportunity to screen both parents and make appropriate referrals while accomplishing what is needed at a 4-month well-child visit.

Massachusetts legislation has been passed allowing reimbursement for this dual screening. All parents need support. Children will benefit from the love and skills each parent contributes to their growth.

DR. MARK R. FRIEDMAN
Belmont

JIM DAVIS/GLOBE STAFF

A Market Basket employee returned shopping carts to a store in Nashua, as seen from inside a vehicle in the parking lot in April 2020.

Extraordinary people doing what many of us consider ordinary work

In her essay “The gentleman in the orange vest” (Opinion, Aug. 14) Elissa Ely celebrates one of the many overlooked people who graciously perform important jobs that are undervalued in our society.

My 37-year-old son is also a gentleman in an orange vest. On the autism spectrum, he has worked diligently and cheerfully for the past 12 years for a large New England grocery chain. He never refuses to take an additional shift and always arrives at work early. Along with wrangling carts in all sorts of weather, he has reunited numerous people with their lost wallets, handbags, and other valuables. He never accepts a reward; he finds his purpose in helping others.

Some parents of adult children working in minimum wage jobs may be ashamed or embarrassed that their child has “failed to launch.” I, however, feel differently. I am proud-er of my son and his dedication to his customers than if he had graduated from Harvard Business School.

Thank you to Ely for recognizing all who derive their purpose from the dignity of work.

EILEEN B. BUCKLEY
Milton

Elissa Ely’s “The gentleman in the orange vest” brought to mind the woman at the parking lot at the Whole Foods on Cambridge Street in Boston who stands by the gate in all weather, helping people get through at a payment kiosk that’s awkward to reach. She says, “Have a blessed day” so sincerely that I feel that spirit all day. She is the blessing of ordinary people who comfort the weary by their everyday behavior. It’s called grace.

SUSAN W. MORRIS
Boston

Opinion

BOSTONGLOBE.COM/OPINION

ENDORSEMENT

Reelect state Senator Will Brownsberger

For the first time in 14 years, state Senator Will Brownsberger, the current Senate president pro tempore and third highest-ranking member in that chamber, will face a challenger in the Democratic primary to represent Belmont, Watertown, and parts of Boston and Cambridge.

There’s a reason nobody has taken on Brownsberger. The 20-year veteran of the state Legislature is a former prosecutor and defense attorney with decades of experience in local elected office. He has been a mainstay in Senate leadership, taking on is-

“I am the one in this race who will actually make things happen, I have a track record of doing it. I care,” Brownsberger told the editorial board, defending both his record and the state Legislature. “It’s a great narrative to say we never do anything, but where do you want to live? Look at the things we’ve done in this state from health care, criminal justice, lowest incarceration rate, lowest uninsurance rate, education.”

“Nobody can make anything happen by themselves,” Brownsberger said. “This is 200 cats, herding cats, and they have to work together to get things done.” Passing the police oversight legislation, which set up the state body that certifies (and can decertify) cops, was an especially notable accomplishment.

Brownsberger’s ability to legislate is particularly relevant because on the issues themselves, the two candidates espouse similar worldviews. At a debate last week hosted by the Charles River Regional Chamber, moderator Greg Reibman, the group’s CEO and president, rattled off a range of policy proposals related to housing, transportation, and energy. With few exceptions, the two candidates agreed on the general best direction forward, further reinforcing the narrative that this contest is less about politics and more about political abilities.

Brownsberger came up through the ranks, serving in a variety of roles in town politics in Belmont, prior to arriving on Beacon Hill. At last week’s debate, he touted that experience, saying he’s “grown through the process.”

“I don’t tell people what they want to hear, I do my homework and try and do the best thing,” Brownsberger said. “I’m at the top of my stride and there’s so much more we need to do.”

This race has also been shrouded by the cloud of Wu and a political squabble she started. Lander says that running for office was his idea alone. Regardless, his bid has turned into a direct confrontation from Wu, who is supporting primary challenges to Democratic state lawmakers who have opposed a portion of her agenda, namely a proposal to shift more of the city’s tax burden from homeowners onto commercial real estate.

Brownsberger has repeatedly said he opposed Wu’s proposed tax shift because it would start to unravel a decades-old compromise that prevents putting too much of a city’s tax burden onto businesses. His argument is cogent and logical.

Previous Boston mayors have sparred with state lawmakers, and Wu has every right to do so as well. But Wu’s payback politics against seasoned state lawmakers in her own party should make people uneasy. Lander should not be penalized for having Wu’s support, but it’s hard to take Wu’s apparent vendetta against Brownsberger seriously.

Brownsberger has the endorsement of Governor Maura Healey. If the executive branch of the state can work collaboratively with Brownsberger, that is the relationship that truly matters.

“I’m not quarreling with the mayor,” Brownsberger told the editorial board. “The minute we can have peace in the valley, I will embrace peace in the valley.”

If Brownsberger wins, Wu should end her squabble with the senator. Forming an alliance between Boston City Hall and a powerful member on Beacon Hill would be much more productive than continuing a grudge match.

ERIN CLARK/GLOBE STAFF

Senator Will Brownsberger spoke at Ashburton Park on Oct. 12, 2021.

sues ranging from criminal justice reform to housing affordability, and census and redistricting work to increasing government transparency.

The Harvard graduate is a well-respected policy wonk, considered to be among the smartest, most capable, and most productive lawmakers on Beacon Hill. The Globe editorial board believes Brownsberger, 69, is well suited to continue in his role and endorses him in the Sept. 1 Democratic primary.

There is, however, a lot to like about his challenger, Daniel Lander, a former aide to Boston Mayor Michelle Wu. Lander, 35, is a first-time candidate who entered the race late last year.

At City Hall, he worked on housing affordability, small-business expansion, and efforts to promote arts and culture.

Lander may indeed have a bright political future. He is a smart, enthusiastic young man with interesting ideas for how to push the Commonwealth forward, specifically how to spur new housing development.

If he were running for an open seat, or perhaps against a different opponent, the editorial board might endorse him. But it would take years for Lander to develop the skills and expertise Brownsberger already possesses.

Lander says he decided to run because the Legislature is not doing enough to address the state’s cost-of-living problems, and he is trying to turn the vote into a referendum on the effectiveness of the state Legislature.

“This race is all about whether the current status quo on Beacon Hill is doing enough to tackle our affordability crisis and, honestly, protect our competitive edge here,” Lander told the editorial board.

That’s a fair issue to raise, and the Legislature deserves some criticism for being slow and lacking transparency. But the idea that Brownsberger is somehow the impediment to what could otherwise be a well-oiled Senate is far-fetched. The truth is something closer to the opposite: Brownsberger is one of the relatively few who’s figured out how to overcome the Legislature’s tendency to inertia.

The Boston Globe

Founded 1872

JOHN W. HENRY
Publisher

LINDA PIZZUTI HENRY
Chief Executive Officer

BRIAN McGRORY
Editor

JAMES DAO
Editorial Page Editor

DHIRAJ NAYAR
President

CRISTINA SILVA
Managing Editor, Operations & Standards

CYNTHIA NEEDHAM
Managing Editor, News

JASON TUOHEY
Managing Editor, Digital Strategy

DEPUTY MANAGING EDITORS

Marjorie Pritchard Op-Ed
Anica Butler Local News
David Scharfenberg Ideas
Jeneé Osterheldt Culture, Talent, & Development
Heather Ciras Audience Engagement
Francis Storrs Special Projects & Enterprise

SENIOR ASSISTANT MANAGING EDITORS

Mary Creane Production
Alan Wirzbicki Editorial Page
Andrew Caffrey News & Enterprise
Chris Morris Living/Arts

SPOTLIGHT EDITOR

Patricia Wen

BUSINESS MANAGEMENT

Dan Krockmalnic Chief Operating Officer & General Counsel
Angus Macaulay Chief Commercial Officer
Anthony Bonfiglio Chief Technology Officer
Tom Brown Chief Consumer Revenue Officer
Josh Russell VP, Print Operations
Michelle Micone Chief Marketing & Strategic Initiatives Officer
Rodrigo Tajonar Chief People Officer
Matt Karolian VP, Platforms & AI
Chris Zeien Chief Financial Officer

Charles H. Taylor Founder & Publisher 1873-1921
William O. Taylor Publisher 1921-1955
Wm. Davis Taylor Publisher 1955-1977
William O. Taylor Publisher 1978-1997
Benjamin B. Taylor Publisher 1997-1999

Richard H. Gilman Publisher 1999-2006
P. Steven Ainsley Publisher 2006-2009
Christopher M. Mayer Publisher 2009-2014
Laurence L. Winship Editor 1955-1965
Thomas Winship Editor 1965-1984

Senator Ed Markey, left, and challenger Seth Moulton

How young people are weighing the Democratic Senate race

Markey believes in this country’s potential. Moulton doesn’t.

By Joshua Rodriguez Ortiz

Joshua Rodriguez Ortiz is a rising junior at Harvard University.

On Oct. 15, 2025, I was sitting in the “bullpen” (the nickname for the intern space at Senator Ed Markey’s Boston Constituent Services Office) working on constituent immigration requests when I saw that my representative, Seth Moulton, announced his bid for the Senate.

Initially, I didn’t know who I would vote for. I was biased toward Markey since I was an intern in his office. However, I also recognized that Moulton would be a new, younger voice for the seat. As I want to see the 64-year-old average age of a US senator lowered, I leaned toward Moulton. Between Joe Biden’s disastrous debate in his reelection bid and the health battles of Republican Senator Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, it is clear that some older people do not know when to step down.

The real issue for me is not about age. It’s about who will champion progressive causes.

The Democratic Senate primary is shaping up to be a battle of generations. Yet, as a 20-year-old college student who lives in Moulton’s Sixth District, I find myself siding with Markey. He’s been outspoken about stopping arms shipments to Israel and has been a strong advocate for climate and energy policies. He supports Medicare for All and believes in taxing the ultrarich. These are key issues that he’s been advocating for years, showing he is a true progressive. He has been a consistent fighter for Bay Staters, and those most vulnerable across the country, for decades.

Another thing that draws me to voting for Markey is his authenticity, rarely seen in politicians. I recall the stories he had told the interns about growing up in a middle-class family in Malden, where his dad was a milkman. He attended Catholic school, which taught him the importance of service and the morals that guide his politics today. For 50 years, Markey has served Massachusetts faithfully, and he inspires me to be as great a public servant as he is.

Now, 50 years is a remarkable number, and Moulton and his supporters argue that it’s time to pass the torch. Massachusetts is faced with the decision of keeping its beloved senator, who is actively championing the progressive movement, or installing a moderate Democrat. The real issue for me is not about age. It’s about who will champion progressive causes.

Markey has been endorsed by Senators Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren, as well as Representative Ayanna Pressley, progressives who have been advocating for meaningful change and who share very similar viewpoints. By being a strong environmentalist, labor supporter, and a fighter for LGBTQ rights, women’s rights, and more, Markey has consistently shown that he’s dedicated to making life better for all of his constituents and is not focused on his own political gain.

During a recent debate between Markey and Moulton, I found myself mostly siding with Markey, but at times, loving the points Moulton brought up. Both want to abolish Immigration and Customs Enforcement, bring down energy costs, end the war in Iran, block data centers that lack local approval, improve housing affordability, and provide universal health care. However, there was nothing that made Moulton starkly different from Markey and the policies he champions that are already benefiting the state. Therefore, I will vote for Markey.

As a lifelong user of public transportation, Markey’s advocacy to make it more affordable is extremely important to me. For example, Markey and Pressley are advocating for a $25 billion federal free transit plan. They claim that eliminating fares will motivate riders to take public transit, allowing people to spend money on essential bills like groceries, rent, or supporting small businesses, which will benefit the economy. I’m for all that.

Additionally, as someone who believes in guaranteed free health care for all and preserving the future health of the planet, Markey’s support for Medicare for All and the Green New Deal demonstrates that he cares about young people’s futures.

Markey’s integrity has also never faltered. On the Integrity Index, which tracks the personal and political finances of members of Congress, Markey scores a 91 (on a scale of 0-100, based on financial conflicts of interest, corporate PAC donations, and stock trading activity). Moulton? He scored a 47. This is largely due to Moulton’s profiteering from defense industry stocks — private investments not available to the public — while serving on the Armed Services Committee.

As the former co-president of the Harvard College Queer Students Association, I’ve seen Markey consistently stand by my community, unlike Moulton, who scapegoated trans folks for the loss of the 2024 presidential election.

“I have two little girls, I don’t want them getting run over on a playing field by a male or formerly male athlete, but as a Democrat I’m supposed to be afraid to say that,” he said. In the recent debate, regarding those statements, Moulton said to the trans community, “I’m sorry if my comments hurt you.” He clearly lacks accountability for the fact that he contributed to the further marginalization of an already vulnerable group.

As a young progressive student who knows that the United States has the potential to be better, I trust Markey to serve faithfully for another six years and accomplish the change our country needs to protect all young students’ futures. He is a man of integrity and has proven that he is the best candidate for the job. I’ll be voting for him on Sept. 1.

Moulton’s ideas are realistic. Markey’s aren’t.

By Sidhi Dhanda

Sidhi Dhanda, a rising junior at Harvard University, is an intern in Globe Opinion.

When I was in elementary school, my dad often drove from Longmeadow, a suburb of Springfield, to Boston. I asked him why he drove instead of taking a plane. He said there were no planes. I then asked about the train. He said that the train option was inconvenient and slow. He told me that there were plans for a better, faster train connecting Springfield to Boston.

Today, almost 15 years later, the same plan has yet to be delivered. I’ve been thinking about that a lot recently as I wrestle with who to vote for in the upcoming Massachusetts Senate primary between Senator Ed Markey and his challenger, Representative Seth Moulton.

The train issue is one of the few policy areas where Markey and Moulton disagree. Markey is a proponent of the West-East Rail — a plan that has been in the works for more than 30 years — while Moulton wants a high-speed rail connecting Springfield to Boston that will make the trip in 40 minutes, down from the current 2 hours and 20 minutes. The train proposal Markey supports, meanwhile, will still take two hours, not much of an improvement.

This difference captures why I, a young person, am voting for Moulton over Markey, even though many people my age are sticking with Markey because of how progressive he is. Of course, I am not voting for Moulton just because I want high-speed rail, but this issue does help explain why I support him.

Markey has been in Washington for half a century. I don’t think that alone is disqualifying, and I don’t want to make this about someone’s age. To paraphrase Markey’s own words, I want to talk about the age of his ideas. Some of Markey’s ideas have aged out.

For example, the West-East Rail made sense when it was first proposed decades ago, but it makes far less sense today. Other countries have shown that high-speed rail is possible and a better solution.

The same is true for some of Markey’s other ideas. I support the goal behind Medicare for All: Everyone should be able to access affordable quality health care. But I question whether continuing to pursue Medicare for All at the federal level is the best way to get there, given how politically unachievable it is. In contrast, Moulton supports a public option for health care, which is seen as having bipartisan appeal.

This is what I mean by ideas aging out. The best idea 30 years ago is no longer the best, not because the goal isn’t noble but because technology has enabled better solutions, or the country has changed so much that an idea that was once possibly feasible simply no longer is.

At some point, legislators have to do more than just discuss the ideal policies. They have to figure out what can be enacted and make real progress. I would rather see a senator try to pursue ambitious, achievable steps than spend another term talking about a policy that remains politically out of reach. I believe that Moulton can be this type of legislator, given the passage of his bipartisan National Suicide Hotline Designation Act and his emphasis on working with people on both sides of the aisle.

Moulton is not my dream candidate, and I don’t agree with him on everything. However, in him, I see a candidate who can make sure the Democratic Party has ideas that make sense for a changing 21st century, like trains that use modern technology and investing in nuclear energy research. None of that has anything to do with his age.

At a time when there is so much discussion about artificial intelligence and its broader impacts, I find the small number of senators with a STEM background to be jarring (there is one engineer, four physicians, and one geologist).

Moulton has a vision for the next 20 years that has kept up with a rapidly changing world on many fronts.

I like the idea of my senator being able to understand AI and how it works. I do feel that sort of expertise is necessary to craft smart policy and get others on board with it. Moulton, a physics major, has this. His physics background also makes his pro-nuclear energy stance and call for party members to follow the science all the more authoritative.

Additionally, Moulton has a sense of what kind of Democrat can attract folks to the party. Through the Serve America PAC, Moulton supported Abigail Spanberger and Mikie Sherrill in their campaigns in Virginia and New Jersey. Both candidates flipped a red seat blue.

His fresh policy ideas, background, and willingness to challenge Democrats to think beyond bumper sticker slogans excite me. He has a vision for the next 20 years that has kept up with a rapidly changing world on many fronts.

In my senior year of high school, I took AP Government, and I learned about the different ways people vote, in particular retrospective and prospective voting. Retrospective voters think about a candidate’s past accomplishments — no doubt Markey has many to be proud of. Prospective voters think about the future.

This election, I’m thinking about the future. I don’t want to live in a future where, in 20 years, kids ask me about a train from Springfield to Boston and my answer is that leaders are still discussing the same idea from 20 years before I was born.

High fuel costs are thorns for farmers

►FARMERS
Continued from Page A1
who, on a recent morning, helped her employees harvest onions and cherry tomatoes a day after rain had provided respite from the drought that has gripped Massachusetts. “It adds more costs but also creates uncertainty over the business that customers may stay away, worried about [their] cost of living.”

Business models vary slightly for small farms in Massachusetts. Some generate revenue by selling directly to consumers or delivering to restaurants. Many, like Barrett’s Mill Farm, take part in community supported agriculture programs, or CSAs, in which customers can pay an annual fee of up to $1,300 for a weekly share of the produce.

But in Massachusetts, they are also struggling with high costs unique to the state, such as high land values and expensive labor. So when they’re hit with abrupt cost increases, like the recent rise in the price of fuel, there’s little wiggle room to adjust, according to Claire Morenon, communications manager at Community Involved in Sustaining Agriculture, a nonprofit that supports more than 250 farms in the state.

“They just have to pay the higher cost and hope that the income from that season balances the unexpected increase in cost of production,” Morenon said.

At Barrett’s Mill Farm, the bulk of the revenue comes from its onsite store and from its participation in the CSA program, which delivers tomatoes, watermelons, zucchini, lettuce, and beets to customers. The farm also makes money from the sale of flowers, such as dahlias, cosmos, and sunflowers.

Holdorf and Maxwell are trying to adapt by farming more within unheated greenhouse-like structures they built three years ago, which allow them to better control the elements.

But there’s no real alternative to the efficiency tractors bring to the everyday workload. Typically, they run the tractors across the 14-acre farm daily for planting, cultivation, and field preparation.

“It’s hard to kind of economize on fuel because the way that we farm requires use of our tractors,” Holdorf said. “It’s not like we can cut back really on the usage of our tractors. So we are just making less money.”

The high cost of fuel comes as farmers are already going through hard times. Drought conditions have stifled plant growth. Tariffs and pandemic-era inflation contributed to a rise in the cost of seeds and fertilizer. Meanwhile, labor costs have gone up, with workers demanding higher wages as they face cost-of-living difficulties, deepened by a rise in the cost of health care.

PHOTOS BY DAVID L. RYAN/GLOBE STAFF

Melissa Maxwell, co-owner of Barrett’s Mill Farm in Concord, harvested small tomatoes at the farm and checked the oil on her tractor. Some of the produce from the farm was headed for markets (left).

“Everything has gone up,” said Ed Herdiech of Autumn Hills Orchard, a 90-acre farm in Groton, which he co-owns with his wife, Kim. On the orchard, they grow multiple varieties of fruits, including apples, pears, and peaches. “Farms are taking a beating.”

Herdiech said that Autumn Hills Orchard, whose primary business is offering fruit picking and delivering to local farm stands, plus retail sales at their store, raised its prices on average 5 to 10 percent.

The orchard is profitable, he said, but they are reinvesting all of the profits back to the business. Herdiech, 59, a retired software executive who has owned Autumn Hills Orchard since 2021, said if he had entered into this business earlier in his life, he might have ended up a farmer buried in debt.

“We are trying to have the farm be self-sufficient financially, and we are trying to ensure the property is passed on to the next generation of farmers,” he said. “We see ourselves as stewards of this land.”

At Barrett’s Mill Farm, more than half of its business comes from the CSA segment. Typically, farms price these subscriptions ahead of time — in the fall and winter for the upcoming seasons. But this year, the farm did not account for the Iran conflict’s effect when setting prices.

“It’s always been tight margins for farming,” Holdorf said. “I think a lot of farms are at risk of closing in this kind of environment that we’re in.”

Maxwell noted, however, that in recent weeks they have noticed an uptick in customers amid the rising cases of cyclosporiasis in the country.

“We think that people are seeking out local produce in light of the outbreak,” she said. “I would hope that no matter how they are introduced to the farm, that they would love coming to the farm and they would keep coming back in the future.”

Some farmers are finding innovative approaches to deal with the rising cost of doing business.

At Verrill Farm, which spreads over about 200 acres in Concord and Sudbury, the owners have refrained from raising prices at their store and instead are asking for minimum $75 orders from restaurants, something they have not done since the pandemic. They are also trying to ramp up events to get people to spend time at the farm, which could inspire them to buy from their store.

Liz O’Gilvie, the executive director of the Springfield Food Policy Council, said that high fuel costs have also stifled the ability of their mobile farmers markets to travel to communities around Springfield that receive the Healthy Incentives Program, or HIP, a state benefit that helps low-income households on SNAP to buy fresh produce from local farms and farmers markets.

“We need to take the food to where people are, so they can access this produce benefit,” she said. “But we haven’t been able to do it as much as we wanted to because of these rising fuel costs. Like, what we thought it was going to cost us to do it, it’s going to cost double that.”

Omar Mohammed can be reached at omar.mohammed@globe.com. @hurufu.

Spike in N.H. power rates could be lesson for Mass.

►ELECTRICITY
Continued from Page A1

cut from giving the spot market a try. That state passed a law last year that requires utilities to purchase at least 25 percent of their electricity this way.

Each approach has its risks for utilities and their customers: Spot markets are more volatile, as severe winter or summer weather or geopolitical events such as the war with Iran can send prices on wild swings; conversely, a period of extended calm, both in nature and in politics, can keep spot prices below what utilities agreed to pay in advance-purchase contracts earlier in the season.

The spot-market experiments are an object lesson in the limited options available to regulators trying to manage rising energy bills.

States that deregulated their electric supply markets in the 1990s, including Massachusetts and New Hampshire, relinquished control over the whole electric system, limiting their oversight to the utilities that deliver the power, not the independent companies that generate it. The purchase cost of that electricity is passed directly on to end users, at no profit to utilities.

And power generators, said Donald Kreis, New Hampshire’s consumer advocate, have little incentive to keep prices in check.

“These are big, profit-maximizing firms with very aggressive promises to their shareholders,” Kreis said. “I think that the system of regulation has failed to aggressively defend consumer interests, and so the economic actors who are trying to make money for shareholders have been taking advantage of that.”

Mandating spot market purchases offers state officials a rare opportunity to exert leverage over electric prices. But as New Hampshire’s experience shows, the policy is not without risk.

Massachusetts Governor Maura Healey is demanding action in the wake of a report from Synapse Energy Economics that found that between 2014 and 2025 Massachusetts customers on basic service paid $3.4 billion more for electricity than it cost to produce that power over the same period.

“It is unacceptable that customers are left paying billions of dollars in additional costs because of the way the current system is set up,” said Healey.

The energy affordability bill under debate on Beacon Hill suggests utilities could cut power costs by purchasing some electricity the day before they need it. The legislation calls for the state’s Department of Public Utilities to consider adopting such a plan.

The utilities would purchase the power through a spot market overseen by ISO New England, the agency that manages the region’s electrical grid.

In New Hampshire, the three major utilities — Eversource, Unitil, and Liberty — buy half of their estimated power needs six months in advance, the rest from the spot market. If spot prices fall below the contract price, customers could get a rate reduction during the next six-month period.

But spot market prices go up as well as down.

Eversource spokesman William Hinkle noted the higher spot prices in New Hampshire were driven by “multiple impactful and relatively unpredictable events, including a global conflict in Iran and one of the coldest winters New England saw in a decade-plus.”

Henry Herndon, executive director of the Community Power Coalition of New Hampshire, estimated the spot market spikes cost Eversource customers a total of $38 million, plus interest.

So, as of Aug. 1, the average New Hampshire residential customer will pay as much as $18 more each month for electric power.

“Basically today’s customers are paying for yesterday’s bad bets,” said Kreis, who represents the interests of residential electric customers before the New Hampshire Public Utilities Commission, or PUC. “That’s bad for consumers.”

The New Hampshire PUC declined to comment on regulatory matters outside of public hearings.

A spokesperson for Constellation Energy, a major power plant operator serving Massachusetts, emphasized the risks of buying power on the spot market.

“Competitive bidding for default service protects consumers from market volatility by securing energy at predictable prices,” the spokesperson said. “Spot market purchases offer no such protection, leaving customers exposed to fluctuations in energy costs.”

But Pat Knight, director of analysis at Synapse, said Massachusetts regulators should not shy away from the spot market simply because of occasional price spikes.

“No one is ever going to exactly know the future energy price,” said Knight. “But by setting an estimate and charging or disbursing ratepayers the difference, you achieve low prices over the long term.”

Knight points to Illinois, where utilities are required to buy part of their power on the spot market. Knight said Illinois ratepayers have experienced both rate hikes and reductions due to gyrations in the spot markets.

Knight favors an approach that combines spot market purchases with a new state agency that would negotiate power contracts with generating companies to achieve lower prices. He estimates such a system would have saved Massachusetts consumers $1.8 billion between 2015 and 2024.

For now, the spot-pricing plan would directly affect a minority of consumers. Synapse estimates 27 percent of Massachusetts residents have so-called default or basic electrical service that would be subject to the plan. The rest purchase electricity from independent suppliers or through municipal aggregation pools. But 27 percent amounts to nearly 700,000 households, said Knight. And, if it works, other electricity sellers may be pressured to lower their prices as well.

Brian Swett, chief climate officer for the city of Boston, noted that the city’s municipal aggregation program, Boston Community Choice Electricity (BCCE), saved $60 million over the past decade by purchasing power for the city’s own buildings and streetlights on the spot market instead of paying the standard Eversource rate.

BCCE also offers cut-rate power to Boston residents by negotiating lower six-month rates than what Eversource offers. But Swett isn’t convinced that switching to spot purchases makes sense for everyone in Boston.

“Taking on that risk on behalf of hundreds of thousands of residential households and guaranteeing them a fixed price is a totally different level of complexity,” Swett said.

The current trend in utility bills is a reminder that the 35 states that deregulated electric service haven’t experienced the economic benefits they expected. In the 1980s, deregulation of airline and telephone markets led to cheaper phone calls and air fares. Economists and politicians expected the same from electricity deregulation.

But the local utility remains a monopoly, in part because of the extensive work required to install and run all the necessary wires and substations in a given city. And their side of the electric bill has soared in recent years, as well.

Meanwhile, competition in the power markets has not yielded huge savings. Several economic studies show that in deregulated states, consumers pay more than those in regulated states: $40 a month more, according to a 2023 survey conducted by The New York Times.

Hiawatha Bray can be reached at hiawatha.bray@globe.com. Follow him @GlobeTechLab.

BOSTON GLOBE MEDIA
1 Exchange Place, Suite 201
Boston, MA 02109-2132

The Boston Globe (USPS061-420) is published Monday–Saturday.
Periodicals postage-paid at Boston, MA.
Postmaster, send address changes to:

Mail Subscription Department
300 Constitution Dr.
Taunton, MA 02783

YEARLY MAIL SUBSCRIPTION RATES FOR NEW ENGLAND

Seven days$1,612.00
Daily (6 Days)$1,060.80
Sunday only.....$520.00

For all other mail subscription rates and information, call 1-888-MYGLOBE or visit www.bostonglobe.com/subscribe

Free newspaper reading service for the visually impaired: Contact
Perkins Braille & Talking Book Library at 800-852-3133 or www.perkinslibrary.org

Attention on the incumbent

As race for Suffolk district attorney heats up, so does focus on Hayden

By Sean Cotter
GLOBE STAFF

Just over four years ago, Kevin Hayden was a little-known name in Boston's political circles. Then-Governor Charlie Baker had tapped Hayden, then the director of the state Sex Offender Registry Board, seemingly out of nowhere in January 2022 to serve in the high-profile role of Suffolk district attorney and to fill out the term of Rachael Rollins, who left to become Massachusetts US attorney.

Hayden secured the position on his own that fall following a closely contested, brutal election in which he defeated a scandal-plagued opponent. Hayden also faced an ethics violation himself for using the office for mudslinging during the race, and his victory was widely credited to the opposition his opponent faced as much as an endorsement of him.

Now, the onetime appointee of a Republican governor is the unlikely favorite of the Boston political establishment, heading into a winner-take-all September

Democratic primary with the endorsement of Mayor Michelle Wu, the city's most prominent progressive Democrat.

In that contest, voters for the first time will have an official say on Hayden with a full term on which to judge his track record as district attorney: They can send him back to office, or return to the progressive platform of Rollins, who is challenging him, or go with another candidate in Linda Champion, who is vowing changes from both of her would-be predecessors.

What is clear is that Hayden carries the power of incumbency while also being a target for those who say his policies have failed.

"Incumbency advantage is real," said Erin O'Brien, a University of Massachusetts Boston political science professor. "You've had time to impress people, you've had time to do above-the-board favors for people, you've had time to do constituent service."

And even so, she said, you

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

Gloria Reuben, who plays a district attorney on TV's "Boston Blue," met with Suffolk DA Kevin Hayden earlier this month.

still have to run on your record.

Since winning election four years ago, Hayden has kept a lower profile than many of his predecessors. It's in keeping with his personality. He's not Rollins, who was an outspoken advocate for various progressive policies and also often in the news for scandal and public clashes with officials and reporters.

Hayden hasn't been unscathed, either. He's been dogged by allegations that he passed over the prosecution of a Transit police officer as a political favor. (That officer, David Finnerty, was later prosecuted by federal prosecutors and convicted.) And Hayden paid an ethics fine for using his office's resources in his last election.

He has maintained that there was not enough evidence to charge the Transit officer. Of his ethics fine, Hayden said he took responsibility and moved on.

"I didn't lie, I didn't change

HAYDEN, Page B4

In Middlesex DA race, a challenge from the inside

Solet-Ryan primary contest has former colleagues squaring off

By Spencer Buell
GLOBE STAFF

It's no easy feat to unseat a Democratic incumbent in Massachusetts, much less a long-serving district attorney who is regularly on newscasts putting away alleged criminals.

But David Solet's challenge of Middlesex District Attorney Marian Ryan is notable, not so much for the steep climb the ex-prosecutor faces in topping his former boss, but for how unlike other races it has been so far.

Neither candidate has tried to stake out the progressive mantle on which past prosecutor candidates have built their campaigns, even if Ryan has been a self-styled progressive before. Nor is there a major scandal to animate the contest. Both Democrats, who are former longtime colleagues, are vying to lead a largely suburban county where crime rates are relatively low.

"It's probably one of the most inside baseball races I've seen," said Jack Perenick, chairman of the Democratic City Committee in Somerville. "It's not clearly defined by the usual [progressive], centrist, or reformist-versus-non-reformist divisions that a lot of Massachusetts' DA races have. It's a little more nuanced."

Nuanced, however, doesn't mean staid.

Solet, a former prosecutor who served alongside and under Ryan for more than 20 years before he resigned to challenge her, has cornered the support of police unions, and charged

MIDDLESEX, Page B4

JONATHAN WIGGS/GLOBE STAFF

The Commonwealth Avenue Mall provided a perfect path for the elephant brigade on a recent summer afternoon.

TO WALK ALONGSIDE GIANTS

Back Bay in awe of herd of 130 elephant statues on Commonwealth Ave.

By Niki Griswold
GLOBE STAFF

There are a number of truly grand avenues in cities across the world, boulevards defined by deep historical significance, cultural relevance, or simple beauty. Think the Avenue des Champs-Élysées in Paris, or La Rambla in Barcelona. New York City has Fifth Avenue and Broadway.

In Boston, we have Commonwealth Avenue.

The thoroughfare starts its path through the city in the Back Bay, and is defined by many things: the 32-acre Commonwealth Avenue Mall that provides a spine for the tony neighborhood, the stately brownstones that frame the boulevard, the towering tree canopy and monuments that dot its central promenade — and for many years, a well-earned reputation of resistance to changing any of it.

Perhaps the herd of 130 life-size elephant statues now calling it home is a sign it's time to forget that — at least temporarily.

Boston's Commonwealth Avenue is the latest stop for the traveling art exhibit known as

The Great Elephant Migration, which aims to raise both funds for conservation efforts and awareness for the importance of human-wildlife coexistence.

Since the elephants arrived on Aug. 4 — situated on one side of the two-block stretch between Fairfield and Dartmouth streets — Boston residents and visitors have flocked to the area

ELEPHANTS, Page B4

Clancy trial: What to expect in final days of testimony

Closing arguments anticipated

By Lea Skene
GLOBE STAFF

After a month of testimony featuring complex legal arguments at the intersection of mental health and criminal justice, jurors in the Lindsay Clancy murder trial are expected to start deliberating this week.

With closing arguments anticipated as early as Tuesday, the end is in sight for what has become a daily courtroom spectacle and international media sensation. Thousands of people have watched an online livestream of the trial and posted their opinions on social media, including conspiracy theories about the case.

Asserting an insanity defense, Clancy has argued she was in the throes of postpartum psychosis when she strangled her three children to death in the basement of their Duxbury home in January 2023.

Prosecutors, meanwhile, say her actions were calculated and methodical. The question for the jury is whether she should be held criminally responsible.

As the trial enters its fifth week of testimony, here's what to expect during the final days.

On Monday, psychiatrist Dr. Avram Mack will return to the stand, testifying as a rebuttal witness for the prosecution. His testimony began Friday afternoon, after the defense rested its case.

Cases like this typically proceed in three stages. After opening statements, the prosecution calls witnesses to outline the facts and present evidence. Then the defense presents its own witnesses, including experts offering their opinions about the available evidence. Finally, prosecutors call rebuttal witnesses, followed by closing arguments from both sides.

Mack said Friday that Clancy should be held criminally responsible because, he concluded, she knew her actions were wrong. Massachusetts law presents a two-pronged standard to consider the question. In order to achieve acquittal, the defense must convince the jury that Clancy was unable to appreciate the wrongfulness of her actions to a moral certainty, or was unable to conform them to the requirements of the law.

Clancy, 36, was suffering from "major depressive disorder," not psychosis, Mack testified. He said she displayed "normal thinking, the ability to think ahead and navigate the world." For example, he said, Clancy followed the rules of the road when she drove her daughter to the doctor just hours before the killings.

Mack said he hadn't considered postpartum conditions in his evaluation, citing guidelines limiting the postpartum period to four weeks after birth. Other experts have rejected that definition, with some saying the timeframe can extend a year or more.

Clancy's third child was born in May 2022. Starting in September 2022, she began seeking psychiatric help for anxiety and depression. Her defense attorney, Kevin Reddington has argued that Clancy's many health care providers failed to properly diagnose and treat her in the months before the killings.

Lindsay Clancy is on trial for murder.

CLANCY, Page B5

BSO musicians, management closer to deal

Ratification vote called 'pending' in contract talks

By Malcolm Gay
GLOBE STAFF

In what seems a clear sign of progress in contract negotiations between musicians and management at the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the BSO announced Sunday that a "ratification vote" is in the offing.

Details were scarce, but the parties have agreed to a 48-hour extension of their current labor agreement: The musicians' contract previously was set to expire late Sunday night; it will now conclude at 11:59 p.m. on Tuesday.

In an email announcing the contract extension, the BSO's president, Chad Smith, said a "ratification vote is pending," adding he would provide more details in "coming days."

Members of the Boston Symphony Players Committee, which is representing musicians in negotiations, did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

The two sides were far apart when they entered tense, marathon negotiations over the weekend. Pressure appeared to mount Saturday when the musicians voted to authorize a strike — a negotiating tactic that clears the way for a work stoppage if the parties fail to reach an agreement.

The negotiations have taken

Contract negotiations have been entwined with a broader debate over the orchestra's future.

place against a backdrop of profound crisis at the BSO, which remains deeply divided over management's brusque dismissal of music director Andris Nelsons.

The players, many of whom are deeply committed to Nelsons, remain furious that they weren't consulted on the decision, saying they fear a top-down future at the BSO where artistic decision-making resides in the C-Suite. Management, meanwhile, has sought to move on, saying the organization must adapt to meet daunting fiscal and demographic challenges.

Contract negotiations, entwined with the broader debate over the orchestra's future, have several added layers of complexity. In addition to the more quotidian sticking points of salary and benefits, the musicians are also seeking a greater voice in artistic decision-making, including programming and the selection of a new maestro.

Malcolm Gay can be reached at malcolm.gay@globe.com.

INSIDE Camera backlash

Two more Massachusetts towns are terminating their contracts with Flock Safety, the controversial license plate reader system. B2

Fatal crash

A Paxton man was charged with felony motor vehicle homicide after a crash Saturday night in North Reading that left two people dead, including a minor. B2

More towns drop Flock cameras

Grafton and East Bridgewater cite public backlash

By Camilo Fonseca
GLOBE STAFF

Two more Massachusetts communities are terminating their contracts with Flock Safety, the controversial license plate reader system that has raised concerns about privacy.

The Grafton and East Bridgewater police departments announced in social media posts Friday that they would cut ties with the company. More than a dozen municipalities in Massachusetts have publicly suspended or terminated use of the cameras in recent months.

Both departments cited community backlash as the driving force behind the decision.

Grafton Police Chief Neil A. Minardi said in a statement that the department had begun deactivating the cameras “amid growing concerns about the use of this technology in our community.”

“This decision also comes in response to vandalism and theft involving these devices,” Minardi said.

Grafton police previously announced the installation of 12 of the cameras. At the time, officials sought to allay public concerns by saying the cameras did not use facial recognition technology, and that every use “must be tied to a legitimate law enforcement purpose.”

East Bridgewater originally planned to install four Flock cameras, but police said that only one had been brought online before the project was paused for public review.

On Friday, the department announced that it would terminate its contract and work with Flock to remove the camera already installed. The department

BARRY CHIN/GLOBE STAFF

Activists rallied last week in Dewey Square, then marched to Flock Safety’s Seaport offices to protest the technology company and its surveillance cameras.

cited “the concerns raised locally and nationally about privacy, data access, oversight, safeguards and the potential for misuse.”

East Bridgewater Police Chief Michael Jenkins described the decision as a matter of “community trust.”

“As Chief of Police, I have a responsibility to continually evaluate whether technology remains appropriate for our department and our community,” Jenkes said in a statement. “That responsibility does not end once a contract has been signed.”

Jenkins said that automated license readers are still useful law enforcement tools “when properly governed.”

But, he added, the ongoing concerns surrounding the program “outweigh the benefits we anticipated receiving from it.”

“There will be times when new technology provides significant benefits to law enforcement,” Jenkins said. “There will also be times when we determine that the risks, concerns, or lack of public confidence warrant taking a different approach. Responsible leadership means being willing to reassess decisions when circumstances change. That is what we are doing here.”

East Bridgewater police said they had not identified any misuse of the Flock system or its data by any officers or town employee.

Flock surveillance cameras have been installed in over 100 communities in Massachusetts. But they have raised concerns of misuse by law enforcement, due in part to questionable searches targeting private citizens.

Earlier this week, police in Stow announced they would also cut ties with Flock, the “direct result” of an officer who allegedly used the camera system and other state databases to access a person’s personal information. The officer in question allegedly targeted a former partner, who told Boston 25 News she had left an abusive relationship with him.

New Bedford police also said they would pause the use of their Flock cameras after an officer accused of stalking her ex-girlfriend was placed on leave.

New Bedford Police Chief Jason Thody said officials would conduct a “thorough review” of the technology “and how to best ensure its secure use going forward.”

Camilo Fonseca can be reached at camilo.fonseca@globe.com. Follow him on X @fonseca_esq and on Instagram @camilo_fonseca.reports.

Paxton man charged with vehicle homicide

Adult and minor killed in North Reading crash

By Katie Cressman and Hannah Goeke
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

A Paxton man has been charged with felony motor vehicle homicide after a crash Saturday night in North Reading left two people dead, including a minor, officials said.

Matthew Sweeney, 21, is also charged with operating under the influence and operating to endanger in connection with the crash, Middlesex District Attorney Marian Ryan’s office said in a statement.

Around 10:45 p.m., Sweeney was allegedly driving an Acura MDX at a high rate of speed on Route 28 when he collided with a Honda HR-V that was stopped at a red light near the intersection of North and Main streets, officials said.

The Honda became engulfed in flames as a result of the crash, police said. First responders and a Good Samaritan attempted to remove the occupants from the Honda, but two victims, an adult and a minor, died at the scene, Ryan’s office said.

The victims have not been publicly identified by officials as of Sunday evening.

Andover Public Schools Superintendent Keith Taverna confirmed in a statement that the child killed in the crash was a student entering third grade at South Elementary School in Andover.

“It is with deep sadness and with the family’s permission that we inform you about a recent loss to the South School community,” Taverna wrote. “An incoming 3rd grade South School student was a passenger in a fatal car accident in North Reading on Saturday night. The incident remains under investigation, and the district is following the lead of public safety officials before providing further information.

“We extend our deepest condolences and support to the victims and their family. We understand that this loss may bring a range of emotions, concerns, and questions for our entire school community.”

Bright yellow caution tape framed the crash site outside

‘But the whole car became engulfed with fire. It was just impossible.’

STERGIOS PAPADOPULOS, witness

Captain Pizza, a family-owned restaurant at the intersection of North and Main streets Sunday evening.

Next to the pizza shop sign that was broken in the crash, mourners left flowers and small messages.

Stergios Papadopoulos, 69, the owner of Captain Pizza, said he immediately ran outside on Main Street when he heard a “big loud bang” Saturday evening.

“The police came immediately because they had been chasing the white SUV,” Papadopoulos said. “The officer tried opening the Honda’s door, but it wouldn’t open.”

Papadopoulos, the police officer, and another civilian tried to pull the victims out of the car but were unsuccessful, he said.

“I could not sleep all night. His whole back was on fire. He kept groaning. And then we saw the little child in the back,” Papadopoulos said. “But the whole car became engulfed with fire. It was just impossible.”

Papadopoulos said the man’s mother had come to the pizza shop Sunday to thank him, but he was not there. The mother told employees that the victim was her only son, Papadopoulos said.

Sweeney was arrested at the scene and is expected to be arraigned Monday in Woburn District Court. It was not immediately clear Sunday whether Sweeney had retained an attorney to represent him.

The crash remains under investigation.

Katie Cressman can be reached at katherine.cressman@globe.com. Hannah Goeke can be reached at hannah.goeke@globe.com.

Family of girl, 6, killed by racket in ’24 files lawsuit

Allege company failed to warn of dangers

By Nick Stoico
GLOBE STAFF

The family of a 6-year-old New Jersey girl who died after she was struck by part of a badminton racket while vacationing in Maine two years ago has filed a wrongful death lawsuit against the manufacturer, Franklin Sports Inc., according to court records and the law firm representing the family.

Lucy Morgan died June 5, 2024, four days after the metal shaft of a badminton racket separated from its handle during a game outside the family’s rental home and struck her in the head.

The lawsuit alleges the Franklin Sports racket was “defective” and “unreasonably dangerous,” according to a copy of the complaint. The suit alleges the company failed to warn consumers that the metal shaft could separate from the handle during normal use.

According to the complaint, Lucy was watching her older siblings play badminton outside the rental home in Limerick, Maine, on June 1, 2024. When one of the children swung their racket at the birdie, the racket’s aluminum shaft separated from its wooden handle. The shaft struck Lucy in the head and pierced her skull, according to the lawsuit.

Emergency crews responded to the home about noon and took Lucy to Southern Maine Health Care in Sanford. She was later flown to Maine Medical Center in Portland, where doctors attempted to save her. She died from her injuries four days later.

Maine State Police described Lucy’s injury as unintentional.

The lawsuit, filed last week in York, Maine, Superior Court, alleges the racket’s design contributed to Lucy’s death.

Lawyers for the family said in court papers that the adhesive used to connect the handle to the metal stem was defective, and the racket “lacked a secondary restraint to secure the metal stem to the handle when, inevitably, there was a failure in the adhesive.”

“The defective and unreasonably dangerous condition of the badminton racket was the direct and proximate cause of Lucy’s death and pain and suffering,” the lawsuit says.

In a statement Thursday, Franklin Sports expressed condolences for Lucy’s family “and all those affected by this tragic accident.”

“Because litigation is pending, we cannot comment on the specific allegations in the lawsuit,” the company’s statement said. “Franklin Sports takes concerns regarding its products very seriously, is committed to product quality and safety, and is carefully reviewing the circumstances surrounding this incident. Our thoughts are with the Morgan family.

The badminton set had been provided with the family’s rental cottage, according to the suit.

“This case represents a parent’s worst nightmare,” attorney Travis M. Brennan said in a statement.

“The Morgan family was enjoying an idyllic summer vacation here in Maine when they lost Lucy due to what we allege was a dangerous and defective piece of sports equipment. We are committed to obtaining justice for Lucy by holding Franklin Sports accountable. We want to ensure these rackets are manufactured in a way where this type of tragedy never occurs again.”

The complaint further alleges the company was aware of a previous case in New York where a child was severely injured in a similar incident.

“The shaft from a Franklin badminton racket already took out the eye of another child in New York well before this tragedy,” attorney Charles P. Hehmeyer, who is also representing the family, said in the statement. “The company knew that but chose not to correct this with something as simple as a pin in the handle, which would cost pennies.”

The lawsuit says Lucy’s three siblings witnessed the accident, and her parents came running to her aid when they heard her screams.

The family is seeking damages permitted under Maine law, “including funeral expenses, pecuniary loss, emotional distress, loss of comfort, society and companionship, and other available damages,” their attorneys said in a statement.

Nick Stoico can be reached at nick.stoico@globe.com.

The Boston Globe

News

CONTACTS, TIPS, COMMENTS
Switchboard: (617) 929-2000
(617) 929-7400
newstip@globe.com
comments@globe.com
SPOTLIGHT TEAM TIP LINE
(617) 929-7483

Customer service

PRINT AND DIGITAL
(888) 694-5623
customerservice@globe.com

Advertising

DISPLAY
(617) 929-2200
bostonglobemedia.com
CLASSIFIED
(617) 929-1500
boston.com/classifieds

This day in history

Today is Monday, Aug. 24, the 236th day of 2026. There are 129 days left in the year.

Birthdays: Composer-musician Mason Williams is 88. R&B singer Marshall Thompson (The Chi-Lites) is 84. WWE cofounder Vince McMahon is 81. Author Paulo Coelho is 79. Actor Anne Archer is 79. Author Alexander McCall Smith is 78. Author Orson Scott Card is 75. Poet Linton Kwesi Johnson is 74. Actor-writer Stephen Fry is 69. Actor Steve Guttenberg is 68. Baseball Hall of Famer Cal Ripken Jr. is 66. Actor Jared Harris is 65. Actor Marlee Matlin is 61. Basketball Hall of Famer Reggie Miller is 61. Film director Ava DuVernay is 54. Actor-comedian Dave Chappelle is 53. Actor Alex O’Loughlin is 50. Author John Green is 49. Actor Chad Michael Murray is 45. Actor Rupert Grint is 38. Basketball player Kelsey Plum is 32. Actor Griffin Gluck is 26.

►In 1814, during the War of 1812, British forces invaded Washington, D.C., setting fire to the still-under-construction Capitol and the White House, as well as other public buildings.

►In 1912, Congress passed a measure creating the Alaska Territory.

►In 1932, Amelia Earhart embarked on a 19-hour flight from Los Angeles to Newark, N.J., making her the first woman to fly solo, nonstop, from coast to coast.

►In 1949, the North Atlantic Treaty came into force.

►In 1951, the first segment of Route 128 was opened. (By 1956, the route around Boston stretched 65 miles from Gloucester to Braintree and would attract several high-tech companies, leading to its nickname, “America’s Technology Highway.”)

►In 1954, President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed the Communist Control Act, outlawing the Communist Party in the United States.

►In 1981, Mark David Chapman was sentenced in New York to 20 years to life in prison for murdering John Lennon; he has repeatedly been denied parole.

►In 1989, Baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti banned Pete Rose from the game for betting on his own team, the Cincinnati Reds.

►In 1991, in response to a coup attempt by hardline Communist leaders attempting to reassert control over the Soviet Union, Ukrainian parliamentarians voted to approve a Declaration of Independence for the state of Ukraine.

►In 1992, Hurricane Andrew smashed into Florida; the storm resulted in 65 deaths and caused more than $26 billion in damage across Florida, Louisiana, and the Bahamas.

►In 2006, the International

Astronomical Union declared that Pluto was no longer a full-fledged planet, demoting it to the status of a “dwarf planet.”

►In 2012, a Norwegian court found Anders Behring Breivik guilty of terrorism and premeditated murder for twin attacks on July 22, 2011, that killed 77 people; he received a 21-year prison sentence that can be extended as long as he is considered dangerous to society.

►In 2018, the family of Arizona Senator John McCain announced that he had discontinued medical treatment for an aggressive form of brain cancer; McCain died the following day.

►In 2019, police in Aurora, Colo., responding to a report of a suspicious person, used a chokehold to subdue Elijah McClain, a 23-year-old Black man; he went into cardiac arrest en route to the hospital and was later taken off life support and died.

Lottery

SUNDAY MIDDAY 5474
Payoffs (based on a $1 bet)

EXACT ORDER
All 4 digits $5,132
First or last 3 $718
Any 2 digits $62
Any 1 digit $6

ANY ORDER
All 4 digits $428
First 3 $120
Last 3 $239
SUNDAY NIGHT 8859
Payoffs (based on a $1 bet)

EXACT ORDER
All 4 digits $5,129
First or last 3 $718
Any 2 digits $62
Any 1 digit $6

ANY ORDER
All 4 digits $427
First 3 $239
Last 3 $120

MILLIONAIRE FOR LIFE
Aug. 22 7-17-27-36-39
Millionaire Ball 4

Jackpot: $1,000,000; no winners
MASS CASH

Aug. 23 6-8-11-25-34
Jackpot: $100,000; no winners
MEGABUCKS

Aug. 22 2-22-25-29-41-44
Jackpot: $27,750,000; no winners
PREVIOUS DRAWINGS

	Midday	Night
Saturday	9358	7319
Friday	9134	2073
Thursday	5440	2282
Wednesday	0772	9127
Tuesday	0982	0153

WEEKEND NUMBERS AROUND NEW ENGLAND
Sun. Maine, N.H., Vermont
Day: 3-digit 440 4-digit 5988
Eve: 3-digit 226 4-digit 5283
Rhode Island

Sunday 2187
Saturday’s Powerball
13-31-54-57-65
Powerball 23

Jackpot: $68,000,000 million; no winners

N.H. Cold Case Unit seeks leads in '77 death

New photos of White Mountains hiker released

By Tonya Alanez
GLOBE STAFF

On the 49th anniversary of the killing of a New Hampshire woman who went missing while hiking in the White Mountain National Forest, law enforcement released previously undisclosed photos of Shari Roth in hopes of sparking memories and generating new leads in the cold case, according to state officials.

New Hampshire's Cold Case Unit is making a plea for local residents or hikers who may have seen the 22-year-old when she was en route from her home in North Conway to Sawyer Pond near Livermore to come forward.

Investigators are also seeking the owner of a red Volkswagen Bug that was parked at the Sawyer Pond Trail on Aug. 21, 1977, the day Roth set out for a solo hike.

Roth was a social worker who worked with the elderly, battered women, and troubled teens. She also was a nature lover and outdoor enthusiast. Her nude and strangled body was found three days after she disappeared just off the trail midway to the pond.

Roth's family has maintained a website devoted to solving her murder and is offering a $25,000 reward.

"Shari was a gentle flower, just waiting for the sunrise," the family said in a statement released by New Hampshire Attorney General John M. Formella.

"She lived by the words, 'You can't change the world, but you can change your corner,'" the family's statement said. "All we can ask is that if someone reads this and has information about who killed her, please come forward. Change your corner of the world by doing the right thing. Your information could help bring answers, justice, and resolution to our family and friends

N.H. ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE

Shari Roth, a 22-year-old New Hampshire woman, went missing in 1977 while hiking in the White Mountain National Forest, and her body was found three days after she disappeared.

‘All we can ask is that if someone reads this and has information about who killed her, please come forward.’

ROTH FAMILY, in a statement who love and miss her every day.”

Roth grew up in Massachusetts and graduated from Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School. She studied at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and graduated from Syracuse University before settling in New Hampshire.

The three photos released by authorities show Roth happy in nature. In one, she is surrounded by evergreen trees, beaming ear to ear as she digs in a knapsack. In another, she stands elevated above the skyline, squinting in the sunlight. She wears a flannel shirt with a red sweater tied around her waist. In the third image, Roth poses on a rock slab, her feet in water, a red-brimmed sunhat atop her short, light brown hair.

“Shari was a dedicated social worker with a bright future who was simply enjoying the natural beauty of our state when her life was violently taken,” Senior Assistant Attorney General R. Christopher Knowles, chief of the Cold Case Unit, said in the statement.

“By releasing these previously unseen photographs, we are asking the public to look closely,” Knowles said. “We hope these images might jog the memory of a hiker, a local resident, or a visitor who was in the North Conway or Livermore areas in August 1977. Even the smallest detail could be the key to solving this case.”

In particular, investigators would like to hear from hikers on the Sawyer Brook Trail or visitors to the Livermore, Bartlett, or Lincoln areas during the weekend of Aug. 20–24, 1977.

They also would like to speak with people who lived or worked in the North Conway area in the summer of 1977, or who recall seeing Roth or noticed anything unusual.

The owners of the red VW Bug parked at the trailhead are not suspects, law enforcement officials said, but investigators believe they may have helpful information.

Investigators are also interested in reviewing any personal hiking logs or journals kept by hikers who were in the vicinity of the Sawyer Pond Trail or Mount Carrigain in late August 1977.

“No detail is too small to be relevant,” Formella's office said.

Investigators urge anyone with information about Roth's disappearance and murder to call the Cold Case Unit tip line at (603) 271-2663 or email coldcaseunit@dos.nh.gov.

Tips can be submitted online at www.doj.nh.gov/criminal/cold-case.

Tonya Alanez can be reached at tonya.alanez@globe.com. Follow her @talanez.

Scammers cost Mass. victims $24m, FBI says

Callers pose as Boston division special agents

By Tonya Alanez
GLOBE STAFF

The FBI is warning the public about an agent impersonation scam that more than 1,000 New Englanders fell victim to last year, resulting in nearly $29 million in losses, according to a statement issued by the agency.

Of those victims, 706 were in Massachusetts, where they reported losing $24,508,041, a spokesperson for the agency's Boston division said.

Nationwide, 32,424 victims filed complaints with losses totaling more than $797 million, the FBI said.

“Scammers are utilizing fear, urgency, and increasingly sophisticated tactics — including spoofing trusted phone numbers — to push people into acting before they can think it through,” Ted E. Docks, special agent in charge of the FBI's Boston Division, said in a statement issued last week.

The scam begins when someone posing as a representative from a bank or some other financial institution calls and tells the victim that their information has been used to open an account that was used to buy illegal guns, the FBI said.

The caller transfers the victim to someone claiming to be an FBI special agent who is investigating the fraud. The victim is encouraged to verify the number, at which point the call inexplicably disconnects, according to the FBI's advisory.

A return call, displaying the FBI's main Boston number of 857-386-2000, follows. The alleged agent, with a fake name and badge number, encourages the victim to move the conversation to a confidential messaging application.

The victim is told their communications with the FBI are confidential and not to tell anyone about it, the agency's spokesperson said.

Federal officials warn the public to be vigilant and know that the FBI will never call or email private citizens to demand payment, personal information, threaten arrest, or ask you to communicate via an encrypted application.

“If you get an unexpected call from someone claiming to be the FBI or any law enforcement agency, stop. Hang up. Then verify the caller by contacting the organization directly using a number you found yourself,” Docks said. “That pause can shut down a scam and keep criminals from turning your panic into their payday.”

The FBI did not detail how the scammers flip the calls into fraudulent financial gains but said it cost 1,092 people in Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island $28,895,404 in 2025.

Those are the New England states covered by the FBI's Boston division, which reported the following breakdowns for each of the states:

- 125 victims in Maine reported losing $684,587
- 706 victims in Massachusetts reported losing $24,508,041
- 148 victims in New Hampshire reported losing $1,678,840
- 113 victims in Rhode Island reported losing $2,023,936

The FBI said the fraudsters in “government impersonation fraud” collect money by threatening to extort victims with physical or financial harm in order to obtain Social Security numbers, credit card or bank information, money, or access to a computer or phone.

Similar scams are conducted via email, the FBI said.

Such interactions should be reported to the FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center at ic3.gov, or to the FBI Boston Division at 857-386-2000.

Tonya Alanez can be reached at tonya.alanez@globe.com.

HARVARD BOOK STORE PRESENTS
SAM A. MILLER
AT FIRST
PARISH CHURCH

MONDAY 8/31 AT 7PM

CREATOR OF @SAMONELLAACADEMY
ON YOUTUBE

GET TICKETS AT HARVARD.COM

The Boston Globe

Future of MEDICINE

September 15, 2026

Joseph B. Martin Conference Center

Join us for expert-led conversations and dynamic programming exploring the breakthroughs reshaping patient care across the preclinical, clinical, and commercial landscape.

REGISTER NOW

Scan the QR code or visit
Globe.com/futureofmedicine

SPONSORED BY

IN PARTNERSHIP WITH

Elephant herd statues break mold of Back Bay

►ELEPHANTS
Continued from Page B1

to take in the elephants, each of which was made by artists in India, in the image of a real wild elephant, and constructed with Lantana camara leaves, an invasive plant.

Questioning outside forces has, for years, been the status quo in the Back Bay. The neighborhood’s well-heeled residents and the powerful neighborhood associations who protect their interests have long chafed at changes, big and small, be it shadows cast by a skyscraper, cannabis dispensaries, a bike lane in front of a mansion, or allowing for late night taco sales.

Past proposals to bring events or other aesthetic tweaks to Commonwealth Ave. have faced pushback, too, out of the desire to protect and preserve the historic, grand boulevard, acknowledged Meg Mainzer-Cohen, president of the Back Bay Association.

For example, she said, an annual pancake breakfast with local celebrity chefs was held on Commonwealth Ave. for many years, before being canceled because of concerns the event was damaging grass and tree roots on the mall.

But the Great Elephant Migration felt special, said Mainzer-Cohen, who first saw the display a few years ago in Newport, R.I.

She and leaders from a number of groups — including Meet Boston; the Boston Public Art Triennial; and the advocacy group Friends of the Public Garden — helped bring the display to Boston, and Commonwealth Avenue specifically.

“This was a good marriage

ERIN CLARK/GLOBE STAFF

Visitors enjoyed a leisurely day taking photos alongside the giant elephant statues on the Commonwealth Avenue Mall.

of an extraordinarily special art installation in the setting of a very, very historic, profound location,” Mainzer-Cohen said.

Liza Meyer, president of Friends of the Public Garden, said there’s “not a lot of change that happens in that landscape.” But she argued that the display is also proof that any reputation Back Bay might have for resisting change is outdated.

Residents can value and appreciate the mall’s historic nature, she said, “and we can [also] experience delight in that space, introducing something new and temporary and engaging and thought-provoking.”

The neighborhood’s green light didn’t come without the necessary assurances, of course. The exhibit organizers, Meyer said, made an explicit commitment to replace and restore the grass on the mall after the display moves on.

Serge Savard, chair of the Neighborhood Association of the Back Bay, told the Globe the Great Elephant Migration organizers also provided his group with thorough traffic management and delivery plans — which he then shared with residents in advance.

He also said he has not heard a single complaint about the display, which is slated to stay until Sept. 13.

“The message is so positive and the elephants are so majestic. ... This has been such a success,” said Sandy Edgerley, co-founder of The ‘Quin House, a private social club in Back Bay that is the lead sponsor of the event. “I’m sure it will just further encourage . . . doing more of these kinds of very innovative initiatives.”

The sought-after exhibit has traveled all over the US, making stops in Beverly Hills, Calif.; Jackson Hole, Wyo.; Houston, Texas; and Miami Beach.

But the exhibit’s cofounder, Ruth Ganesh, told the Globe that Boston — and the stretch of Commonwealth Avenue in particular — felt like the right choice for its next stop. The avenue, which connects the Boston Public Garden and Frederick Law Olmsted’s “Emerald Necklace” park system, was “perfect” because of how it evokes the many “elephant corridors” that exist between the species’ now-fragmented habitats in India.

“We have felt the love and sense of protection for this pretty sacred spot in Boston,” Ganesh told the Globe. “It’s very special. ... I don’t think there could be a more perfect place for [the elephants] in Boston.”

One recent sunny Friday afternoon, the space was buzzing with people — young couples taking photos, children darting between the statues, people running their fingers along the elephants’ bodies and trunks.

“They’re probably not going to let us leave,” Joseph Liu said laughing as his 2-year-old son, Lenox, and 5-year-old daughter, Luna, played among the statues.

He said he, his wife, Jennifer Wong, and his children likely wouldn’t have come to the Back Bay if there hadn’t been an attraction, like the elephants, to see.

“Bringing art anywhere is a way to slow things down and get people to visit,” Liu said. “I hope people do more stuff like this because this park is underutilized for art.”

Niki Griswold can be reached at niki.griswold@globe.com. Follow her @nikigriswold.

Suffolk DA race puts Hayden record to test

►HAYDEN
Continued from Page B1

my story,” he said. “I did what leaders do.”

Voters will now judge that, as well as Hayden’s reputation as a politically moderate operator compared to his predecessor. That’s borne out in some ways, as he has moved away from some of Rollins’s positions — sometimes to praise and sometimes to criticism. But he’s also proved somewhat unpredictable, including a controversial and unusual decision earlier this year to charge a Boston police officer with manslaughter just days after the officer shot a man to death during a traffic stop.

One of his earliest moves was a public pronouncement to end Rollins’s controversial “no-prosecute list,” a selection of lower-level crimes that she said her office would default to not prosecuting. However, prosecutors and defense attorneys alike who spoke to the Globe say little has changed in practice: The office has treated those crimes the same way as it did going back to even Rollins’s predecessor, often dismissing the charges outright.

Separately, building on his original law-and-order pitch, Hayden formed a task force to combat downtown shoplifting and theft. Hayden’s office said that’s led to judges issuing hundreds of stay-away orders preventing people from going to certain businesses, and more than 50 prosecutions of people with multiple infractions of shoplifting, or for participating in a larger scheme.

Perhaps above all, Hayden touts the expansion of diversion programs as the hallmark of his tenure. His office said it has diverted about 25,100 cases through programs that redirect people toward rehabilitation instead of prosecution, often with agreements that avoid convictions but may include probation. About 1,300 of those cases were referred to specialty courts for veterans or people with mental health issues, and other programs.

His office said more than 200 people have completed the new “Services Over Sentences” program for people in the throes of substance abuse who were in the troubled Mass. and Cass area, which has been an open-air drug market for years. Another 131 more are still in the program.

Hayden’s record on investigating claims of wrongful conviction is more mixed. During Hayden’s tenure, the so-called Integrity Review Bureau has received 120 applications for further investigation, moved ahead on 39 of them after screening, and thrown out or reduced convictions against 11 people.

That is a slower pace than under the team’s creator, Rollins, according to data from the time.

The most recent case involved Stephen Pina, who spent decades in prison following a 1996 murder conviction. In July, the state’s highest court threw out his conviction, based on newly available evidence.

Hayden’s office fought each step of the way before it announced Aug. 13 that it would no longer seek to prosecute the case. Rollins celebrated on social media, because it was her administration that originally decided to review it.

His record has been a target of Rollins and Champion throughout the campaign. At a recent forum, Hayden touted that crime stats across the city are low and have been dropping, generally, he said, even as more people are going into diversionary programs.

“Criminal legal reform and public safety can exist at the same time,” he said during the forum. “And they must.”

Rollins’s pitch centered on strength of leadership and force of personality. She was the one who started much-needed progressive reforms when she was DA, she said.

“You heard his voice quivering because he’s uncomfortable,” she said of Hayden during an exchange at the forum. “What we need now is a leader. ... My voice does not quiver when I speak.”

Champion sought to present herself as a more focused and less-scandal-plagued alternative. She noted her own history, growing up homeless as a teenager and later working as a prosecutor in the Suffolk office.

“The individuals that I see do not have the temperament,” she said of her opponents.

(Champion is currently suing the Globe, alleging she was defamed by a story about her place of residence, claims the Globe says are “without merit.”)

Sean Cotter can be reached at sean.cotter@globe.com.

►MIDDLESEX
Continued from Page B1

while campaigning that Ryan has not done enough to push for more levers the office can use to address violent crime in the state’s most populous county.

The Cambridge resident, who worked in the DA’s office fresh out of Harvard Law, left to work as chief legal counsel at the state’s public safety office and returned to head a cold-case homicide unit that Ryan herself launched in 2019. A Boston magazine story from May recounts his work to resolve a decades-old murder case in Bedford — and how the tensions between him and Ryan from it helped prompt his decision to challenge her.

He has since said the office should be pushing to close what he called loopholes in the courts’ rules on so-called dangerousness hearings, through which prosecutors can hold suspects who are deemed a threat before trial.

He also believes a failed effort at the state level to pass a law aimed at cracking down on “drugged driving” offenses might have passed if Ryan had used her position of influence to vocally support it. (Ryan argues that the technology needed to support it doesn’t yet work well enough.)

“I could see from the inside, firsthand, that there were important things that the DA’s office is supposed to be doing to protect people,” Solet, whose last name rhymes with “wallet,” said in an interview. “Those things were not happening.”

But Ryan, who has been district attorney since 2013 and is currently the only woman to hold the role in Massachusetts, has twice beaten back Democratic primary challengers before, including amid criticisms from former employees of how she’s run the office. She also pointed to crime statistics, including an analysis of federal data that suggests Middlesex County is currently among the safest large counties in the United States, giving little demonstrable need, she argues, for reshaping pretrial detentions.

“That is sort of a solution in search of a problem because if you look at the data, we’re not in that place,” she said. “And I would certainly be thinking differently about what solutions were out there if that’s where

TAYLOR COESTER FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

MATTHEW J. LEE/GLOBE STAFF

David Solet (top), a former prosecutor in Middlesex County, is running against incumbent District Attorney Marian Ryan in the Sept. 1 Democratic primary. Ryan (above) has led the Middlesex district attorney’s office since 2013.

we were.”

Ryan, meanwhile, touts other changes she’s engineered, nodding to her decisions after the 2020 murder of George Floyd to hire a director of racial justice initiatives, and launch an anti-hate, anti-bias task force.

“Even with all of the sort of nonsense that’s been coming from the [Trump] administration that you can’t have those kinds of things [focused on diversity and inclusion], I’m not moving one inch,” she said.

And she’s done it in an office that, in previous iterations, was long seen as a launching pad to higher office. Before her predecessor, Gerry Leone, three consecutive Middlesex district attorneys — Martha Coakley, Tom Reilly, and Scott Harshbarger — all later won office as state attorney general, before mounting bids for the governor’s office, none of them successful.

With another term, Ryan said, she would focus on new threats emerging, among them scams involving cryptocurrency kiosks and the spread of apps that can produce AI-generated nude images of people, including children.

To the extent Ryan has focused on an office higher than her own, it’s to highlight her confrontations with President Trump. She pointed to a 2019 lawsuit that sought to ban federal immigration agents from making arrests in Massachusetts courthouses. She and then-Suffolk District Attorney Rachael Rollins dropped the suit in 2021, saying a Biden administration policy change made it unnecessary, though a new state law passed this year would realize a version of the ban Ryan sought.

“No other district attorney in Massachusetts has been standing up to Donald Trump and his administration in the same way I have,” the Belmont Democrat said.

As he campaigns, Solet has been touting support from dozens of police unions and public safety groups as evidence that law enforcement leaders are looking for change. Solet has also advocated for a broadened approach to investigating gun crimes, pledging, if elected, to start a gun crime unit that would probe how illegal firearms flow into Massachusetts.

Ryan has brushed aside Solet’s law enforcement support, saying she doesn’t take endorsements or donations from police unions to avoid the appearance of conflict because her office investigates officer misconduct.

Scott Hovsepien — president of the Massachusetts Coalition of Police, which represents thousands of officers across the state and is endorsing Solet — cast Ryan as having “rejected police officers and their households as a constituency.”

“David greatly respects the work of police officers in the Commonwealth and, unlike DA Ryan, is unafraid to receive their support,” Hovsepien said in a statement.

Solet also earned the endorsement of a group called Cambridge Bicycle Safety, which has called for more of an emphasis on punishing drivers who hurt or kill cyclists and pedestrians on the road, particularly after outrage among transit advocates over the death in 2024 of a cyclist in a collision on Memorial Drive.

Christopher Cassa, who volunteers with the cycling group, said the district attorney should have a dedicated staff and “protocols” for charging those involved in crashes, and called for more “transparency to decision-making” in traffic cases.

Ryan also said she has had productive conversations with cycling advocates about how prosecutors approach those cases.

“I want to make progress in that area,” Ryan said.

Spencer Buell can be reached at spencer.buell@globe.com. Follow him @SpencerBuell.

Last testimonies in Clancy trial

►CLANCY
Continued from Page B1

Instead, the defense has argued, they kept prescribing her psychiatric medications, some of which likely exacerbated her symptoms. She and her ex-husband, Patrick Clancy, have separately filed medical malpractice lawsuits against her providers.

During cross-examination of Mack, Reddington challenged the doctor's credentials, suggesting he has little experience treating postpartum patients. Mack countered that he sees himself as "a generalist who happens to have a couple areas of focus," including adolescent mental health and addiction.

Reddington's cross-examination of Mack is expected to continue Monday morning when court resumes.

Then the prosecution will call more rebuttal witnesses, likely other experts in psychiatry who have reviewed the evidence and formed opinions about Clancy's mental state at the time of the killings.

She has admitted to strangling 5-year-old Cora, 3-year-old Dawson, and 8-month-old Callan after sending her husband out to pick up medication and takeout for dinner. She then slashed her neck and wrists and jumped out a second-story window, attempting suicide. She is paralyzed from the waist down and appears in court each day in a wheelchair.

Mack testified Friday that Clancy told him her last words to the children: "Go to God."

Earlier in the day, the jury heard from the last defense expert, Dr. Phillip Resnick, a forensic psychiatrist with expertise in postpartum conditions who's testified in other high-profile murder and insanity cases.

Resnick said he evaluated Clancy four months after the slayings and concluded she was suffering from postpartum psychosis when she killed her children. He said she was experiencing "command hallucinations": a man's voice telling her to kill her children and herself. She was also experiencing a "delusion of influence," the sense of losing control of your body, Resnick said.

"It was almost like she was a puppet and someone else was pulling the strings," he said. For that and other reasons, she should not be held criminally responsible, he testified.

Given that she had been displaying symptoms of "mild mania," Resnick said his final diagnosis was bipolar disorder with major depression.

Even as Clancy sought help from various mental health providers, including checking herself into the hospital, she may have downplayed some symptoms because she was scared of having her children taken away, Resnick testified.

He also said the killings meet his definition of "altruistic filicide," which is a "murder committed out of love, rather than hostility." Clancy was obsessive about caring for her children, and with her distorted, psychotic thinking, "she did what she believed was morally right," he added.

The dueling perspectives presented during Friday's testimony are likely a preview of what's to come during closing arguments. After that, it's up to the jury.

If she's found not guilty, Clancy will be committed to a state psychiatric hospital, where she'll be evaluated periodically and could eventually be released if authorities conclude she doesn't pose a threat to the community. If convicted, she will face a mandatory sentence of life in prison without parole.

Lea Skene can be reached at lea.skene@globe.com. Follow her on X @lea_skene.

Almanac: Warmer winter ahead

By Claire Thornton
GLOBE STAFF

Boston residents still traumatized by our last brutal winter, with its blizzards and massive snowbanks, may have reason to celebrate.

Forecasters with the Old Farmer's Almanac announced that the 2026-2027 winter could be warmer and drier than average across much of the northern US because of El Niño, the weather pattern that shifts the Pacific jet stream.

Many factors will influence temperatures and precipitation during the upcoming cold months, but so far, El Niño "is the clearest early clue for winter 2026–2027," forecasters with the almanac said.

During El Niño years such as the one happening now, warmer ocean temperatures in the Pacific cause the jet stream to change its path, forecasters said. When that happens, the fast-moving stream of air brings warmer weather conditions to North America, peaking around winter, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The last time North America experienced a Super El Niño, during the 2015-2016 winter, recorded temperatures in December were 7 to 10 degrees above average, according to Globe meteorologist Ken Mahan.

The effects this winter could be just as dramatic, he said.

"We're entering uncharted waters this winter as El Niño reaches a strength we've simply never recorded before," Mahan said.

In addition to bringing warmer than average winter weather, El Niño years usually bring more rain and ice, Mahan said.

Claire Thornton can be reached at claire.thornton@globe.com.

MARLON JAMES AT THE BRATTLE THEATRE

WEDNESDAY 9/2 AT 6PM
IN CONVERSATION WITH SAEED JONES

PRESENTED BY:

GET TICKETS AT HARVARD.COM

PVD FEST 2026

REBECCA PRY

DOWNTOWN PROVIDENCE

PVDFEST.COM

SEPTEMBER 18 & 19

CO-PRODUCED BY THE CITY OF PROVIDENCE AND FIRSTWORKS

The Boston Globe
BEST OF THE BEST 2026

.....

Your go-to source for what to do, see, and eat in and around Boston.

See the list at Globe.com/best

Boston Children’s Museum to return sacred Hawaiian artifacts

By Mark Shanahan
GLOBE STAFF

The Boston Children’s Museum has agreed to repatriate several objects deemed by a Native Hawaiian organization to be sacred.

According to an online notice posted by the National Park Service, which administers the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA), the museum will repatriate eight items, including two wooden bowls, a water container, and a traditional Hawaiian octopus lure.

The notice states that the items are all examples of “specific ceremonial objects” used by Native American religious leaders for present-day adherents to practice traditional Native American rites and rituals. Exactly how the Boston Children’s Museum acquired the items isn’t clear in every case.

Passed by Congress in 1990, the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act governs the repatriation of Native American ancestral remains, funerary and sacred objects, and other items of cultural importance to lineal descendants, Native American tribes, and Native Hawaiian groups. The law applies to museums, universities, state agencies, local governments, and any other institution that receives federal funding.

In recent years, Harvard’s Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology, which had been criticized for slow-rolling repatriations, has stepped up its effort to return Native American objects, including transferring ownership of a pipe-tomahawk to the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska and a kayak to the Alutiiq Museum in Alaska. Likewise, the Founders Museum in Barre has repatriated dozens of items, including Sioux weapons, pipes, moccasins, and clothing. Still, it’s estimated there are some 870,000 Native American artifacts — including 110,000 human remains — in the possession of US colleges, museums, and government institutions.

This is not the first time that Boston Children’s Museum has repatriated objects. Over the past five years, the museum has returned objects to several Native American tribes, including the Onondaga Nation and Muscogee (Creek) Nation in 2024, and the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma and the Quapaw Nation in 2023.

In the current case, a Hawaiian organization — Hui Iwi Kuamo’o — made its request of the Boston Children’s Museum after reviewing the museum’s inventory. (NAGPRA obligates colleges, museums, federal agencies, and other institutions to complete an inventory of the Native American remains and associated funerary and cultural objects in their possession.)

“They shared quite a bit of background context in their request,” said Melissa Higgins, the museum’s president and CEO. “It was really fascinating. They did a research paper, basically, which is not the norm in requests we’ve received.”

Higgins said the museum reviewed the organization’s request and honored it.

“We aren’t the arbiters of what is culturally significant for a Native Hawaiian group,” she said. “If we can create the geographic link, or it’s been created for us, we assume that, yes, this is cultural patrimony and they are requesting that items be repatriated and we will do that.

In addition to the two bowls, water container, and octopus lure, the museum is returning a traditional Hawaiian bowling stone (‘Ulu Maika), a tapa beater (I’e Kuku), a net holder for bowl (Koko), and a poi pounder (Pohaku Ku’i ‘Ai). Only the octopus lure had been on display at the children’s museum, in a collections drawer as part of the “Investigate” exhibit. (It has since been removed and will be replaced with a label that explains the repatriation process.)

“To me and to our instruction, it does feel very important that we understand the belongings that we are stewarding here,” Higgins said. “If a group that has much more direct connection and expertise with these objects is willing to share information with us, or has questions for us, it’s really incumbent upon us to make sure we’re listening and being careful about that.”

Mark Shanahan can be reached at mark.shanahan@globe.com.

Stars shine in ART’s bone-chillingly prescient ‘Rhinoceros’

HAWVER AND HALL

From left: Paul Giamatti as Jean and John Turturro as Berenger in the American Repertory Theater production of “Rhinoceros.”

By Ty Burr
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

CAMBRIDGE — I don’t imagine you’ll see a piece of theater as mind-bendingly funny as the first half of the American Repertory Theatre’s production of “Rhinoceros” any time soon. I don’t imagine you’ll see a piece of theater as bone-chillingly prescient as the second half.

That the two pieces of the classic Eugene Ionesco play snap together into a devastating organic whole is due to the spare, sharp staging by the ART’s artistic director Diane Paulus and a starry cast that rises to the occasion — lunatic, ominous, or piercing as the moment calls for. Audiences will come to this “Rhinoceros” for lead actors John Turturro and Paul Giamatti, but they’ll leave pondering the ways the human animal can stampede itself into totalitarianism and wondering how much rhinoceros they might have in themselves.

Written in 1959, the play’s a warhorse of the Theatre of the Absurd that doesn’t seem very absurd at the moment — maybe it did when you were assigned it in high school French class, but in a 21st century of MAGA mayhem, mass-media sanewashing, ICE concentration camps, and internet rage-baiting, “Rhinoceros” cuts right to the quick. Set in a small French village, it gives us a flawed but stalwart hero in Berenger (Turturro), the mensch-y town screw-up who watches in dismay as, one by one, his friends and colleagues turn into an army of bellicose horned ungulates. Ionesco was born in Romania and raised mostly in France, and his rhinoceri have their roots in the fascist Iron Guard of his birth country and the Stalin-loving intellectuals of the post-war French Communist Party. The play’s sword cuts both ways.

At first everyone is horrified by the appearance of the beasts, but soon most of the townspeople

STAGE REVIEW

RHINOCEROS

By Eugene Ionesco. Directed by Diane Paulus. Presented by American Repertory Theater at the Loeb Drama Center. Through Sept. 27. Tickets from $43 including fees. www.americanrepertorytheater.org are making accommodations and allowances, because they don’t want to be left out or because they hope it’ll all go away or — in the case of Berenger’s self-satisfied stuffed-shirt friend, Jean (Giamatti) — because they secretly worship power and despise the weak. If Turturro is the lead of this production’s first two acts, Giamatti is their outrageous scene-stealing star, delivering a master class in comic timing and hilarious bluster. The actor has done himself up as a cross between Colonel Blimp and Mr. Monopoly, and he stops the show with Jean’s snorting, growling, head-butting transformation at the end of Act II. The scene is peerless physical comedy, an actorly triumph and a nightmarish blast.

You come back after intermission wondering how Paulus and company can possibly follow that up, and it’s true that the energy sags a bit as Berenger holes up in his apartment while the rhino hordes march in the streets. Tatiana Maslany, an excellent actress and Emmy-winner for TV’s “Orphan Black,” makes the most of the play’s thinnest character, the hero’s office crush Daisy — Ionesco may have been his least convincing when writing women, not that anyone’s playing for realism here — and Alex Ross is unnervingly on-target as a bland, upstanding co-worker who talks himself in to joining the mob before our eyes.

Yet Turturro rises from being somewhat overshadowed in the play’s early going to turn Berenger into a rickety, wearily powerful Resistance hero, and he’s abetted by Riccardo Hernández’s stark stage design — I don’t know what that Babel-esque tower of iron bed frames means in the final scenes, but it works — and a phenomenal sound design by Fitz Patton that gives the rhino-people their basso-freako voices and renders the tread of the animal legions into the ceaseless march of jackboots.

The ART has tinkered with the long-standard English translation by Derek Prouse, cutting some minor characters and streamlining scenes, but they’ve thankfully resisted the temptation to overplay any correlations to current movements or people — no orange wigs or red hats on the rhinos — in part because they don’t have to. Not when there are lines in “Rhinoceros” that could come straight from an angry Facebook screed: “I never believe journalists. I don’t need them to tell me what to think” or “All you get at universities are effete intellectuals with no practical knowledge of life” (both spoken by Clay Singer as another of Berenger’s co-workers, a toothy Marxist with fiery opinions and no spine).

There are echoes in Turturro’s performance of his beleaguered office drone in TV’s “Severance,” and if Giamatti found some of Jean’s juggernaut aggression in his stint as the villainous Rhino in a 2014 “Spider-Man” sequel, more power to him. A more telling connection might be between this 1959 play and the scalding political humor and bleak humanism of Romanian New Wave cinema in the past quarter-century. As he’s morphing violently from man into beast, Giamatti’s Jean assures his friend, “It’s not that I hate people. I’m just indifferent to them — or rather, they disgust me; and they’d better keep out of my way, or I’ll run them down.” That’s what a police state sounded like in Ionesco’s day and that’s what it sounds like in ours. In the ART’s “Rhinoceros” you don’t laugh until it hurts. You laugh and then it hurts.

Prince Harry and six others must pay initial $13 million over failed invasion of privacy case

By Pan Pylas
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Prince Harry and six others, including Elton John, have been ordered to pay an initial 9.5 million pounds ($13 million) to the publisher of Britain’s Daily Mail newspaper following their failed invasion of privacy case — and could face an additional 25 million pounds in legal costs.

In a judgment Friday, Justice Matthew Nicklin said in a written statement that the payment to Associated Newspapers Ltd. will have to be made by Aug. 28. The payment is at the upper end of expectations and marks a vindication for the journalists at the Daily Mail and a defeat for the losing claimants and their lawyers.

The claimants lost a High Court case in London last month during which they had alleged malpractice, such as the illegal hacking of phones, on the part of Associated Newspapers.

The other high-profile figures behind the case were Doreen Lawrence, the anti-racism activist whose son Stephen was stabbed to death in 1993 as he waited for a bus; Elton John’s film producer husband, David Furnish; actors Sadie Frost and Liz Hurley; and politician Simon Hughes. Lawrence’s costs are expected to be covered by the others.

In excoriating comments, Nicklin said “several features” were important in his decision, including the “speculative” nature of the claims and the failure of the claimants to “voluntarily” withdraw serious allegations that could no longer be backed up.

“The conduct was unreasonable to a high degree,” he said.

The publisher has said it incurred more than 34 million pounds during the case. Should it pursue the claimants for the remainder of the costs, and get the necessary legal approval to do so, then Harry and the six others will be liable for a further 25 million pounds or so.

The claimants took out insurance for around half of that total, in line with the budget estimates provided at the outset by the lawyers working for Associated Newspapers.

Though the judge said the costs appeared “excessive,” he said he would not impose a cap that would have limited the claimants’ liabilities as it would have been “too broad brushed, would risk unfairness, and would be vulnerable to the charge that it was arbitrary.”

The amount that will be paid could well be determined in the future by costs judges, specialists who assess and determine financial outcomes in civil litigation when parties cannot agree.

David Bailey-Vella, chairman of the Association of Costs Lawyers, said the ruling “could not have gone much worse” for the claimants.

He said the claimants will “surely try again before the costs judges to try and show they relied on Associated’s original budget when buying the insurance and so should not have to pay more.”

Hughes, a former member of the centrist Liberal Democrats, said he was “disappointed and surprised” that Associated Newspapers’ recoverable costs were not limited.

None of the other claimants have yet commented on the judge’s decision. They have until Oct. 2 to decide whether to appeal.

The publisher had strongly denied the claims made during the 11-week trial in London earlier this year. In his July 7 judgment, Nicklin said there had been a shortage of evidence to support the 97 claims and found there was a possibility that the reporting came from legitimate sources.

In a statement following the decision, Associated Newspapers said the judgment is a “devastating critique of an attempt to destroy a newspaper and the reputations of its journalists, editors and executives.”

“The truth is that these outrageous claims should never have been brought,” it said. “That they were pursued raises disturbing questions about the conduct of elements of the legal profession.”

The judgment comes two days after it was made public that Harry and his wife, Meghan Markle, are moving back to the UK. The Duke and Duchess of Sussex, who are no longer working royals, decamped to California more than six years ago but will relocate back later this month to live in a nonroyal residence outside London.

Harry’s defeat against Associated Newspapers brought an end to a trio of lawsuits accusing tabloid publishers of using unlawful tactics, such as phone hacking or hiring private detectives to dig up dirt on his life.

Harry won a judgment in 2023 that condemned the publishers of the Daily Mirror for “widespread and habitual” phone hacking. Last year, Rupert Murdoch’s flagship UK tabloid, The Sun, made an unprecedented apology for intruding on his life for years and agreed to pay substantial damages to settle his privacy invasion lawsuit.

Harry has said his litigation — in which he broke with royal family tradition to seek relief in the courts — was a primary source of his falling out with his father, King Charles III, and brother Prince William.

His grudge with the tabloids runs deep and his legal actions are part of his larger quest to reform the news media that he says damaged his relationships and made him “paranoid beyond belief.”

He blames the press for the death of his mother, Princess Diana, who was killed in a car crash in 1997 while being pursued by paparazzi in Paris, and for attacks on his wife, Meghan, that led the couple to abandon royal life and move to the US in 2020.

TV HIGHLIGHTS

Soccer: Premier League, Fulham-Chelsea, 3 p.m., USA
Baseball: Red Sox-Marlins, 6:40 p.m., NESN
Baseball: Rays-Tigers, 6:40 p.m., FS1
WNBA: Valkyries-Lynx, 8 p.m., USA
Listings, C6

Sports

THE BOSTON GLOBE MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 2026 | BOSTONGLOBE.COM/SPORTS

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

Nick Sogard began what became the Red Sox' 32nd come-from-behind victory with a solo homer in the second inning.

Sweeping success

Bennett returns to form after break, helps Red Sox topple Giants

By Tim Healey
GLOBE STAFF

Red Sox 5
Giants 4 Jake Bennett is back — on the mound and in his highly effective form.

After a longer-than-usual break of eight days between starts, he returned Sunday in the Red Sox' 5-4, sweep-completing win over the Giants, recovering from near disaster in the opening inning to pitch through the seventh at Fenway Park.

Bennett gave up three earned runs (plus an unearned run) and seven hits, walked one, and struck out six. Altogether, it made for his longest and probably his best outing in more than a month.

"I definitely felt more like myself," he said.

His afternoon took an odd shape, though, with an iffy start before he settled down. A walk and three consecutive singles — including run-scoring knocks from Bryce Eldridge and Victor Bericoto — put Bennett on shaky ground quickly.

It would have gotten worse if not for back-to-back standout plays by left fielder Eli White (jumping catch at the wall) and center fielder Ceddanne Rafaela (diving catch of a sinking line drive) to end the top of the first.

Although Rafaela practically plucked the ball off the ground, he characterized the play as medium difficulty. He heard on his

RED SOX, Page C4

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

Connor Wong and Jake Bennett took a minute to regroup in the seventh after Christian Koss made it all the way around the bases on a ground ball to short.

Sogard in middle of infield revival

ALEX SPEIER
ON BASEBALL

At different points this year, the Red Sox sounded alarm bells about their middle infield production.

In early June, they asked Romy Gonzalez to fast-forward through a rehab assignment in hopes of getting a jolt in the lineup. He came back before he was ready, struggled, and got demoted to the minors. One month ago, the Sox traded for Curtis Mead to come aboard as a power-hitting second baseman. After Mead suffered a broken wrist in his first game, they tried to trade for a shortstop before the deadline.

But with Mead still in a cast, without a deal for Zach Neto or Otto Lopez, with Trevor Story and Isiah Kiner-Falefa on rehab assignments, with Marcelo Mayer having been dealt to the Giants, the Sox have improbably fielded one of the most offensively productive middle infields in baseball for nearly two months. The latest showcase came on Sunday, when second baseman Nick Sogard went 2 for 3 with a homer, double, and walk to help propel a 5-4 win and conclude a three-game sweep at Fenway against the Giants.

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

Andruw Monasterio has helped fill the void at shortstop with Trevor Story out.

For the season, the switch-hitting Sogard is hitting .287/.401/.426, including a .299/.421/.448 line since returning to the big leagues in place of Mead. He's 11 for 22 with two homers and four doubles during his current six-game hitting streak.

"You can't say enough about it," interim manager Chad Tracy said. "You're getting power swings on the left side, powerful swings on the right side. You're getting great defense. It's been enormous, the at-bats he's taken."

The combination of Sogard and Anthony Seigler at second base, with Andruw Monasterio at short, has given lineup-changing depth. Despite considerable turnover, since July 1, the Sox have gotten

ON BASEBALL, Page C4

BEN VOLIN
ON FOOTBALL

Vrabel challenges Patriots' depth to push harder

Mike Vrabel called a timeout Saturday night with 1:53 left in the first quarter after the Eagles ripped off a 9-yard run. It wasn't because his Patriots were tired or the sideline was disorganized.

"I saw dog-[expletive] defense," the coach said after the Patriots' 24-21 preseason win over the Eagles. "And I figured that if I did not call a timeout, that I would not be able to get what I wanted to say off my chest."

The Patriots sat their starters Saturday, but an NFL team needs all 53 players (and then some) in a 17-game season, and Vrabel sent a clear message that he's not happy with his backups on either side of the ball.

"I do not think we have a very deep team," Vrabel said. "So I think we have to make sure that we are preparing our football team and that we are doing everything that we can to keep our best players available."

The backup offensive line is a mess after losing three players to injuries, forcing the Patriots to sign 36-year-old guard Greg Van Roten last week. The tight end depth behind Hunter Henry is suddenly thin with rookie Eli Raridon a surprise inactive Saturday.

And the backup defense got gashed by the Eagles' running backs. Will Shipley averaged 5.1 yards per carry in the first half, and the Patriots played like they had never seen a swing or screen pass before, leaving running back Carson Steele wide open for six catches, 84 yards, and a touchdown out of the backfield.

"I just don't feel enough of us challenging and competing at the line of scrimmage when they run the football," Vrabel said at halftime.

Offensive linemen, tight ends, defensive tackles, edge defenders, linebackers, and a wide receiver trade — Eliot Wolf will be busy before roster cuts are due at 6 p.m. Sunday.

Other thoughts after two preseason games and four weeks of camp:

■ Kayshon Boutte didn't play an offensive snap Saturday, just like starting receivers A.J. Brown, Romeo Doubs, DeMario Douglas, and Mack Hollins. But considering the way everyone is

ON FOOTBALL, Page C2

Lots to watch for in high school football

Season begins Sept. 10 with new coaches, new players, and old rivals

By Nate Weitzer
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

The high school football season is coming up fast, with games slated to start Sept. 10 after a condensed preseason that begins Monday.

Coaches will have 15 days to prepare their athletes for openers, and with Rosh Hashanah falling on Sept. 11, there are more than 30 MIAA games the day before.

Here are some early story lines to follow.

■ Shorter preseason: The new MIAA standardized schedule eliminated Friday and Saturday practices the opening weekend. That leaves just 15 practice days before season openers on Sept. 10.

Athletes must participate in 15 practices to be eligible for the opener, and with only mandatory days off Aug. 30 and Sept. 6, coaches have safety concerns.

"Personally, my fear isn't for the older, experienced player," said Milton coach Steve Dembowski, the coaches representative on the MIAA football committee. "When you take away practice time, what suffers is the technical teaching: Technique, blocking and tackling, which is a safety issue."

With no days off, most programs have cut one or two of their scheduled scrimmages.

■ Playoff format changes coming: This is the last season of the playoff format in which 16 teams qualify in each of the eight divisions. Starting in 2027, the field in Divisions 1-8 will be cut to eight teams and the top eight power-ranked teams in Divisions 1-2 automatically qualify for the Super 8 — which programs can't opt out of. The new format adds a ninth week to the regular season and reduces non-playoff games from two weeks to one.

■ New coaches: After capping an incredibly successful 20-year run at King Philip with a fourth Super Bowl title, Brian Lee retired, handing off his whistle to offensive coordinator

SCHOOL FOOTBALL, Page C6

INSIDE

SEAN GARDNER/GETTY IMAGES

STONE COLD STELLAR — Ryan Blaney battled through a mistake by his pit crew to win the NASCAR Cup Series' latest stop at New Hampshire Motor Speedway. C2

Playoff tough Clark fumbled a big lead, but held off a strong field to earn win in PGA Tour playoffs. C2

Revolution square New England leaves more home points on the table via draw with New York City. C2

NFL NOTEBOOK

Kittle ahead of schedule

ASSOCIATED PRESS

San Francisco tight end George Kittle was taken off the physically unable to perform list on Sunday, providing hope that he might be able to return from a ruptured right Achilles tendon before the season opener.

The 49ers got good news on the injury front 10 days before the team was set to depart for Australia for a Week 1 game against the Rams on Sept. 11, with both Kittle and All-Pro running back Christian McCaffrey back at practice.

The Niners are scheduled to leave for Australia on Sept. 2. Kittle said last week that he needed to get practice time in pads before then to determine whether he would make the trip.

Kittle ruptured his Achilles on Jan. 11 in a playoff win at Philadelphia. He had 57 catches for 628 yards receiving and seven touchdowns last season.

McCaffrey had missed the past two weeks of practice with what the team had described as “tightness.”

Star defensive end Nick Bosa remains out with soreness and tendinitis in his surgically repaired right knee. Bosa tore his right ACL in Week 3 last season.

The 49ers added depth at linebacker by acquiring Deion Jones from the Saints for running back Zamir White. The two sides reached the deal Sunday night, a person familiar with the trade told the AP.

Jeanty injures leg

Raiders running back Ashton Jeanty had to be helped off the field after apparently being injured late in Sunday’s practice and was unable to put pressure on his right leg.

The Raiders did not provide a statement on Jeanty’s status and there was no indication of when an update would come.

Biadasz placed on IR

Chargers center Tyler Biadasz was placed on injured reserve after he hurt his left knee in a practice with the 49ers.

Biadasz went down after 49ers defensive tackle Sebastian Valdez fell into his leg during an 11-on-11 drill.

Wright done for year

Defensive end Alex Wright was placed on injured reserve by the Browns because of a season-ending Achilles tendon injury he suffered during a joint practice against the Bills on Thursday. Wright was carted off after he went down while working in a one-on-one drill against Bills offensive tackle Spencer Brown. The Browns signed Derek Barnett to fill Wright’s spot. The 10-year veteran played six seasons for Philadelphia and has been with Houston the past three, where he had 12½ sacks.

Vrabel unhappy with the backups

►ON FOOTBALL
Continued from Page C1

talking — Boutte said he is “blocking out the noise,” and receivers coach Todd Downing said Boutte is “an example I will use for the rest of my coaching career, the way that he has just been a pro and shown up every day” — here’s betting that Boutte’s DNP was to keep him healthy so the Patriots can trade him this week. A fourth-round pick would probably get it done.

“Definitely try to be up front with those guys about the situation, and control what you can control,” was Wolf’s answer at halftime Saturday when asked about Boutte.

■ On his 69-yard touchdown catch, Kyle Williams displayed the dazzling speed that will earn him a roster spot. But he still struggles tracking the ball and using his body to shield defenders. Williams caught only 2 of 6 passes thrown his way, and wasn’t close to coming down with one deep pass from Tommy DeVito, letting it bounce to the turf 2 yards away. Boutte is one of the best deep-ball trackers in the NFL, and it’s wishful thinking if the Patriots think Williams can replace his production.

■ The Patriots are thin at running back after Rhamondre Stevenson and TreVeyon Hender-

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

First-round pick Caleb Lomu has been asked to play and handled multiple roles on the offensive line in the preseason.

PATRIOTS MAILBAG

Who has been the best rookie so far?

By Christopher Price
GLOBE STAFF

Welcome back to the mailbag. This week, we have personnel questions, as well as thoughts on quarterbacks, coaching philosophy, and much more. Let’s get to it.

How many players not currently on the Patriots roster will be on the roster for the Seahawks’ game?

— Miguel Benzan, Conn.

Excellent question. I always stress final cuts in the NFL aren’t really final; every team makes a flood of personnel moves between those cuts and Week One of the regular season. (And that doesn’t include the creation of the practice squad.) My guess is there will be three. Given their needs — and depending on who might be out there — I wouldn’t be surprised if they went after some depth along the defensive line or at linebacker. Especially if someone who played for Mike Vrabel in Tennessee is suddenly available.

Who’s been the best rookie this summer?

— George Beverly, Cape Cod

Caleb Lomu. I’m willing to grade Lomu’s summer on a curve, as he’s been asked to play multiple roles (right and left tackle), and he’s handled just about everything that’s been thrown at him. There have been some rookie moments, but I can see him evolving into a swing tackle role this season and then going from there.

Gabe Jacas has gotten up to speed quickly, and has terrific power off the edge. But he’s been caught out of position too often, and needs to work on some other pass rush moves. Eli Raridon continues to look impressive; the fact that he didn’t play Saturday could be a sign of just how important the coaching staff thinks he’s going to be.

Are the Patriots good at drafting and developing quarterbacks? We’ve had a good run with Drew Bledsoe, Tom Brady, and now Drake Maye. (There were so many other duds we could have drafted.) And then there are teams like the Jets who haven’t had a legit QB for almost 30 years. Or are we average at it, and the Brady 20-year run makes it all look better?

— Adam King, Boston

More of the latter. From a big-picture perspective, the Brady run does offset some of the misfires you skipped over (Mac Jones, Bailey Zappe, etc.). But there’s still something to be said for avoiding an endless cycle of drafting and developing a new franchise quarterback every three years.

Regarding the coaching staff, what are the biggest differences you’ve noticed between their approach this year compared to last year? Maybe break it down on each side of the ball — defense and offense.

— Mike, Charlotte, N.C.

It starts with continuity. It’s extremely rare to have all three coordinators (and key assistants) return after going to a Super Bowl, as with most of the roster. As a result, the acclimation process that happened last year has resulted in a lot of coaching shorthand this time around. The expectation level in all three phases is clear. Last season, there was a period of adjustment. This summer, that’s not the case.

Is what happened in Thursday’s joint practice with the Eagles, when Marcus Jones came away with two interceptions of Jalen Hurts, a case of Jones being good or [more about] Hurts?

— A. Rodriguez, California

I’d go with the former, at least from what I saw on both plays. Jones is one of the smartest defensive backs in recent franchise history, something he proved last season with a pair of pick-6s and excellent coverage work. (The only time he gets beat is when he’s overmatched in jump balls against a taller receiver.) If he didn’t have that sort of resume, it’d be easy to suggest that his performance was a fluke, but he continues to consistently show he’s one of the best in the game when it comes to working as a slot corner.

this year to be the blocking tight end. Raridon is dinged up (and more of a receiver than blocker), and the three street free agents on the roster (CJ Dippre, Tanner Arkin, and Jack Westover) don’t seem up to the task.

■ First-round pick Caleb Lomu played 60 snaps Saturday, and it was noteworthy that they all came at left tackle. Lomu will likely start the season as the top backup at both tackle spots; he has spent a lot of time on the right side this training camp, but his presence looms large over Will Campbell.

■ Vrabel is still giving tough love to second-round pick Gabe Jacas, who missed the entire offseason due to a contract dispute and has been behind all camp. Jacas had only three half-tackles and a quarterback hit in 37 snaps on defense. The Patriots need Jacas to develop into a starting pass rusher and edge defender, but he’ll mostly be on special teams to start, where he played 14 snaps on Saturday.

“I think just still inconsistent,” Vrabel said. “We have to be able to see what he can do and what we feel like we can count on when the regular season comes.”

Ben Volin can be reached at ben.volin@globe.com.

Revolution draw as Turner, Freese sparkle

By Jon Couture
GLOBE STAFF

Revolution 1 The top two American goalkeepers at this summer’s World Cup were the stars Sunday at Gillette Stadium, as the Revolution’s Matt Turner and New York City FC’s Matt Freese combined for nine saves in a 1-1 draw.

A sleepy opening 20 minutes gave way to a highlight-laden end of the first half, with Dor Turgeman putting the Revolution (10-7-4, 34 points) ahead in the 36th minute and James Sands answering for NYCFC (7-8-6, 27 points) 20 seconds into stoppage time.

Each team had ample chances to add goals, but were denied by two of MLS’s best. Freese, who usurped Turner as the national team starter from the 2022 Cup, shone brighter in the matinee — his five-save day including a pair on a first-half Carles Gil penalty attempt.

Turner was similarly tested, and got an assist from the post on a Talles Magno header late in the first half, but finished with four stops.

It was an even match between the rivals, but one that featured plenty of momentum swings. Sands — twin brother of Revolution defender Will Sands — was at the center of all the biggest ones.

The Revolution looked poised to take the lead when Peyton Miller, who menaced New York up the left side repeatedly, drew a 25th-minute penalty after James Sands cut down his run. But Gil was denied by Freese — first on a full extension dive to the keeper’s left, then sprawling to his right when Gil tried to score on the rebound.

Gil, who leads New England with seven goals, had converted all 17 of his penalty attempts in league play since the start of the 2021 season.

James Sands made his own stop in the 33rd minute, sliding to kick another Miller shot off the goal line. The Connecticut teen had run onto a Gil pass and chipped over a sliding Freese, only for Sands to race in for a last-second save.

Turgeman’s fifth goal of the season came three minutes later. Jack Harrison, playing against his former team, created space on the right side and lobbed across the goal, where Miller popped the ball back in front, and Turgeman chopped it in with his left foot.

Harrison has assisted on all five Revolution goals in his four matches since signing last month.

The consistent New England pressure then led New York coach Pascal Jansen to make a pair of first-half defensive substitutions. Though Miller soon broke in on another dangerous attempt — Freese stuffed a poor Turgeman effort in the 42nd minute — the momentum turned.

The match was square moments later off a corner kick, when Magno — credited with a team-high four shots — found James Sands as he broke from a goal-front scrum.

New England remains fourth in the Eastern Conference, but plays its next four matches away from home. That run begins Saturday night at 14th-place Columbus.

Jon Couture can be reached at jonathan.couture@globe.com.

GOLF NOTEBOOK

Clark battles back at BMW

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Wyndham Clark has been through this before — losing a big lead in the final round, playing alongside a gallery favorite. He finished strong Sunday at the BMW Championship, just like he did at the US Open, and closed with an even-par 70 for a three-shot victory at Bellerive in St. Louis.

Clark won for the third time this year, putting him squarely in the conversation for PGA Tour player of the year considering one was a major and the other was a playoff event.

But just like at Shinnecock Hills, it wasn’t easy.

He lost his five-shot lead to Rory McIlroy in 11 holes and it was tense until Clark — without a birdie all day — holed a birdie putt from just outside 15 feet on the par-3 16th. McIlroy had a putt to match and stay tied, but missed.

McIlroy then made a mess of the par-5 17th, going from rough to bunker to bunker for a bogey, and Clark began to pull away with another birdie. He finished with a third straight birdie for style points, good for 17-under 263.

McIlroy didn’t make a birdie over the last seven holes of a 69 and finished alone in third.

Clark wasn’t the only one with cause to celebrate. Patrick Cantlay, who came in at No. 43 in the FedEx Cup, showed plenty of moxie. Four times he bounced back from a bogey with a birdie, closing with three birdies in a row for a 68 to finish runner-up and be among the top 30 who advance to the Tour Championship.

Also moving into the top 30 was Gary Woodland, who closed with nine straight pars and fought back tears as he returns to the Tour Championship for the first time since 2019 while recovering from brain surgery three years ago.

DARRYL DYCK/THE CANADIAN PRESS VIA AP

Miyu Yamashita heads to the FM Championship in Norton off a dominant week at the Canadian Women’s Open.

Robert MacIntyre closed with a 65, enough to move him into the top 30 as well. British Open champion Ryan Fox nailed down the final spot.

No. 1 Scottie Scheffler, meanwhile, said he was dealing with hand, foot, and mouth disease that causes blisters. He first became sick on Monday.

“I’ll get some rest now and hopefully that will help,” he said.

Yamashita romps

Diminutive Japanese star Miyu Yamashita matched the LPGA Tour’s 72-hole scoring record in a wire-to-wire, nine-stroke victory in the CPKC Women’s Open at Royal Mayfair in Edmonton, Alberta.

The 4-foot-11-inch Yamashita made an 8-foot birdie putt on the par-4 18th for a 4-under 66 and 23-under 257 total. Six strokes ahead entering the round, Yamashita also set a tournament record in Canada’s national championship.

Fellow Japanese player Yuri Yoshida was second at 14 under after a 69. Both are part of the 144-player field for this week’s FM Championship in Norton, which will include the full top 10 of the world rankings and 14 of the 15 winners on the LPGA Tour this season.

LIV wraps season

Michael La Sasso, the 2025 NCAA individual champion and the youngest player on LIV Golf at 22, won the season-ending event in Westfield, Ind., capping a 5-under 65 with a birdie on No. 18 to beat Jon Rahm by a shot.

La Sasso finished at 18-under 252 at The Club at Chatham Hills. Rahm shot a 63 Sunday to finish one ahead of Bryson DeChambeau (64) and Sergio Garcia (65).

Rahm’s Legion XIII won LIV’s team component for a second straight season.

NASCAR

Blaney wins another at Loudon

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUDON, N.H. — Ryan Blaney overcame a major fumble by his pit crew and charged from 17th to first for his second consecutive NASCAR Cup Series win at New Hampshire Motor Speedway.

The Team Penske driver led a race-high 115 of 301 laps Sunday and fended off Bubba Wallace by 0.586 seconds.

Josh Berry, who is trying to find a ride for the 2027 season, finished a season-best third, the fourth consecutive top 10 for the Wood Brothers Racing driver.

The top five was rounded out by Christopher Bell and Kyle Larson. Ryan Preece finished ninth and kept his Chase hopes alive by gaining 19 points on Shane van Gisbergen, who finished 20th and remains in the 16th and final spot for the 10-race title run.

It’s the 20th career victory and third this season for Blaney, who had cruised to a big lead when a lug nut fell off the left-front tire of his No. 12 Ford during a pit stop under caution with 111 laps remaining.

“Whenever I say those things after something bad happens, it’s my relief valve,” Blaney said about scolding his team with an expletive. “I have to get it out in the open, or I’ll be stewing over it a while. That’s how I have to get over things . . . It takes me five or 10 seconds to move on.”

The 2023 Cup Series champion picked his way through traffic and was back up to seventh when the yellow flag flew on the 226th lap for a three-car crash. Crew chief Jonathan Hassler made an aggressive strategy call for two right-side tires, and Blaney gained six spots in the pits to retake first place, and led the final 74 laps on the 1.058-mile oval.

Hassler said the error “maybe was a little bit of a blessing in disguise” because Blaney emerged several spots ahead of the contenders who took four tires. Of the top 12 finishers, Blaney was the only driver who took two tires on his last stop.

Points leader Denny Hamlin also rebounded from a pit stop miscue that dropped the Joe Gibbs Racing driver outside the top 15 with less than 100 laps remaining. But he rallied for a seventh place that clinched top seed in the Chase.

A last-place finish ended the dim Chase hopes for Ross Chastain, whose No. 1 Chevrolet suffered a mechanical problem after only 40 laps.

The Boston Globe

THE SCRUM

The morning briefing for people who run Massachusetts.

Massachusetts politics is a contact sport.

Get in the game with The Scrum — the Globe’s newsletter delivering the political coverage you won’t find anywhere else.

Sign up now at Globe.com/scrum

Baseball

Sogard in the middle of an infield revival

►ON BASEBALL
Continued from Page C1

a combined .284/.362/.429 line from their mid-dle infielders — the best average, on-base, and OPS (.791) for any team.

“I guess you could say we built a lot of depth in the middle of the field in the offseason,” said Tracy. “Obviously it’s been very needed with some of the stuff we’ve gone through.”

For Sogard, the opportunity has been meaningful. The 28-year-old has started 23 of 24 games since returning to the big leagues at the end of July, performing at a level surpassing anything he’d previously done at the game’s highest level.

“It’s just invaluable getting to have that rhythm of playing every day,” said Sogard. “I haven’t done a ton of damage at the big league level yet, but I felt like I could do something similar here to what I’ve done in the minor leagues. To start to see that show up is satisfying.”

For a time, it didn’t seem certain that Sogard would get such an opportunity in 2026. His brief run in May as an everyday infielder got short-circuited by an ill-timed oblique injury.

He was either on the sidelines or back in Worcester while watching others step in at second. When the Sox traded for Mead, did Sogard worry that he’d missed his window to cement a place in the big leagues?

“Definitely a little bit of that. But at the same time, you can’t control these things. Spending time kind of concerning yourself with things that are out of your control I think isn’t valuable,” said Sogard. “I just trusted that whenever I’d get an opportunity, I’d try and take advantage of it and play the best baseball I can. We’ll see what even happens going forward, but just trying to take advantage of every day and help out.”

Sogard’s allusion to “what even happens going forward” was an obvious acknowledgement of forthcoming roster changes. Story and Kiner-Falefa both spent the week rehabbing with the WooSox. Both are nearing returns to the active roster.

But unlike with Gonzalez earlier in the year, the performance of Sogard and Monasterio has given the Sox the luxury of patience. Those two have allowed the decision about when to activate Story and Kiner-Falefa (who will both be examined in Boston on Monday) to be driven not by necessity, but instead opportunity.

“There are cases where you have no choice, like [with Gonzalez],” said Tracy. “You just get forced into things sometimes. Then there’s other times, depending on the length of time [a player is out], where you have the ability to lengthen it out.”

With just 32 games remaining in the season, the Sox will soon have a late-season roster reconfiguration. It remains to be seen what that means for the playing time of Monasterio and Sogard. Regardless of their roles, the team’s surge into contention has been in no small part due to the high level of play they’ve delivered.

“It’s everyone just trying to do their job and play their game and pick the next guy up,” said Sogard. “I think it’s the nature of the whole team — just a gritty, gritty group of guys just trying to battle and play complementary team baseball.”

Alex Speier can be reached at alex.speier@globe.com. Follow him @alexspeier.

AL wild card

	W	L	Pct.	GB
New York.....	74	56	.569	—
Boston.....	71	59	.546	—
Cleveland.....	65	66	.496	—
Texas.....	65	66	.496	—
Toronto.....	64	68	.485	1½
Minnesota.....	63	68	.481	2
Baltimore.....	63	68	.481	2
Seattle.....	62	69	.473	3
Detroit.....	61	69	.469	3½
Kansas City.....	58	74	.439	7½
Los Angeles.....	52	79	.397	13
Athletics.....	51	80	.389	14

Bennett strong after extra rest, helps Red Sox to sweep

►RED SOX
Continued from Page C1

PitchCom device that Bennett was throwing something soft (changeup), which he figured would be down (and ended up just below the zone).

That was enough information for Rafaela to anticipate a batted ball in front of him. Combine that with a good read of Andrew Knizner’s shot to medium-depth center field, and Rafaela laid out for another ho-hum highlight.

“It wasn’t that tough,” Rafaela said. “I’m happy to help out the pitcher.”

Bennett didn’t flip a switch immediately, but across their next couple of chances, the Giants’ hard contact devolved into fast outs — particularly after their pitchers blew the lead.

The first time through the order, San Francisco was 4 for 8 with a walk and three runs.

The second time through the order, Bennett held the Giants to 2 for 9.

The third time, 1 for 9. The lone hit was Christian Koss’s single on a routine-looking grounder to shortstop that turned into a bona fide Little League home run. Andruw Monasterio’s errant throw put the ball down the right-field line, where right fielder Wilyer Abreu retrieved it, only to airmail a throw over third base to award Koss home.

And the fourth time, 0 for 2. Bennett finished his day with a strikeout of Rafael Devers.

Bennett credited his in-game improvement to

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

Eli White had Jung Hoo Lee’s number on a first-inning fly ball that fell just short of the Green Monster.

RED SOX NOTEBOOK

By Tim Healey

GLOBE STAFF

Sunday marked a milestone for Garrett Crochet, just not in a way that he or the Red Sox wanted.

It was his 120th day on the injured list with a left shoulder problem, triggering a clause in his six-year, $170 million contract intended to protect the team against this type of scenario.

His ability to opt out after the 2030 season — one year early — is eliminated. Instead, the Red Sox newly possess a team option, worth $15 million, for 2032, a potential seventh season of the deal.

This is not what Crochet expected when he landed on the IL in late April with what he initially thought was minor shoulder inflammation. But in recent weeks, he came to accept the circumstances to such a degree that actually crossing the threshold was a mere formality.

“I’ve long since accepted it,” Crochet said before the Red Sox’ 5-4 win in the series finale with the Giants. “Regardless of that, my goal is to come back and help the team in any way that I can.”

To that end, Crochet is attempting to return this season as a reliever, which practically speaking is his only option. He doesn’t have time to build up to a starter’s workload.

His slow but — of late — steady progress has included playing catch from 90 feet with greater intensity. That is better than the 60 feet from which he threw for a couple of weeks.

Crochet has stayed optimistic, even as he fights the calendar and has to “weather the storm” physically after throwing.

“Recovery has been good,” he said. “Seeming to increase intensity and volume a tick, weather the storm a little bit the next day, and then a couple of days later when I have the same parameters and guidelines for the throwing.

“So I had a high day Tuesday and then I had a high day Friday. And the recovery Friday was better than it was Tuesday. Just kind of continuing to level that up.”

Interim manager Chad Tracy said: “Throwing with more intent, which is good. So, he’s just going to keep plugging along, and we’ll see how he progresses and where we can get him to.”

Rehab roundup

Following a minor league offday Monday, Roman Anthony (sprained right wrist/hand) will join Triple-A Worcester to resume his rehabilitation assignment, Tracy said.

Next steps for Trevor Story (sports hernia) and Isiah Kiner-Falefa (left forearm stress reaction) are to be determined. They will return to Boston and be reexamined Monday.

“Up in the air,” Tracy said. “We’ll see how they feel when they come in here [Monday] and figure out what we’re going to do there ... what moves we’ll make or if they’re going to go back out and continue to play [in the minors].”

Anthony went 3 for 11 in four games with Double-A Portland and played seven innings in left field Sunday.

“I still think he’s in a building-up phase [in the] outfield and continuing to get at-bats,” Tracy said.

Story is 4 for 21 with no walks and no extra-base hits in six games, which includes playing three days in a row. Kiner-Falefa is 1 for 13.

Mead update

Curtis Mead is due for four-week follow-up scans Monday to see how his fractured left wrist is healing.

Regardless of what those show, he will move into a splint (and out of a cast), which he will wear for the next two weeks, he said. He hopes to then graduate to range-of-motion activity.

Pitching plans

For a series against the Marlins beginning Monday, the Red Sox will keep their rotation in order: Ranger Suarez, Payton Tolle, Sonny Gray. It will get a tad tricky after that because of a doubleheader against the Yankees on Saturday. Tracy mentioned a potential Alec Gamboa/Brayan Bello spot start, but that will be determined by bullpen usage in the days prior ...

Justin Slaten (right elbow inflammation) played catch Sunday for the first time since being sidelined. That puts him about five days behind Garrett Whitlock (also right elbow inflammation), whom the Red Sox expect back when eligible (Tuesday) or shortly thereafter ... The Red Sox have sold out 16 consecutive home games. They had an announced crowd of 36,278 on Sunday ... Luke Murray, the new Boston College men’s basketball coach, threw out a ceremonial first pitch ... Rafael Devers across three games in his return to Fenway Park: 1 for 10 with a homer, three strikeouts, three walks, and zero appearances as a first baseman.

Tim Healey can be reached at timothy.healey@globe.com. Follow him @timbhealey.

Marlins-Red Sox series thumbnails

At loanDeport Park, Miami, Fla. Monday, 6:40 p.m. NESN, WEEI-FM (93.7)
	W-L	ERA
LHP Ranger Suarez	5-3	3.41
RHP Sandy Alcantara	13-8	3.46
Tuesday, 6:40 p.m. NESN, WEEI-FM (93.7)
	W-L	ERA
LHP Payton Tolle	8-6	3.08
TBA	—	—
Wednesday, 6:40 p.m. NESN, WEEI-FM (93.7)
	W-L	ERA
RHP Sonny Gray	16-3	2.79
RHP Ryan Gusto	0-3	4.37

Head to head: This is the only series between the teams. Last year, the Red Sox won two of three games at Fenway Park. Miscellany: The wild-card contending Marlins (67-64) swept three games from the Nationals over the weekend ... SS Otto Lopez’s .306 batting average is tied for fifth in the majors, and he is in the top 10 for hits, doubles, and triples ... Alcantara leads the majors in innings (176⅔) ... Miami has stolen the second-most bases (132) in MLB.

Red Sox 5, Giants 4

At Fenway Park, Boston
SAN FRAN.	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO		Avg.
Basabe 2b	4	0	0	0	0	1		.224
Devers dh	3	1	0	0	1	2		.241
Adames ss	3	1	1	0	0	1		.230
Kennedy 3b	1	0	1	0	0	0		.148
Eldridge 1b	4	0	2	1	0	1		.252
Bericoto lf	2	0	1	1	0	0		.244
a-Gilbert ph-if	2	0	0	0	0	1		.236
Lee rf	4	0	0	0	0	0		.289
Knizner c	4	0	0	0	0	0		.200
Cox cf	4	1	2	1	0	1		.255
Koss 3b-ss	3	1	1	0	0	0		.200
Totals	34	4	8	3	1	7

BOSTON	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO		Avg.
Jones dh	2	1	2	0	0	0		.217
b-Gasper ph-dh	2	1	1	1	0	0		.258
Rafaela cf	2	0	3	2	0	0		.289
Abreu rf	4	0	0	0	0	1		.256
Contreras 1b	4	0	0	0	0	1		.282
Durbin 3b	4	0	0	0	0	1		.255
Sogard 2b	3	2	2	2	0	2		.287
Monasterio ss	4	0	1	0	0	0		.254
White lf	3	0	0	0	0	1		.250
c-Duran ph-if	1	0	0	0	0	1		.207
Wong c	3	1	2	1	0	0		.257
c-Rutschman ph-c	1	0	0	0	0	0		.240
Totals	35	5	11	5	1	5

San Francisco.....210 000 100 — 4 8 0
Boston.....210 000 00x — 5 11 2
a-struck out for Bericoto in 6th, b-doubled for Jones in 4th, c-struck out for White in 8th, d-grounded out for Wong in 8th. E—Abreu (8), Monasterio (6). LOB—San Francisco 4, Boston 7. 2B—Gasper (7), Sogard (9), Monasterio (23), Wong (11). 3B—Jones (1). HR—Cox (2), off Bennett, Sogard (2), off Wilkinson. SB—Rafaela (17). Runners left in scoring position—San Francisco 1 (Knizner), Boston 4 (Rafaela, Durbin 2, Rutschman). RISP—San Francisco 2 for 4, Boston 4 for 16. Runners moved up—Monasterio. GIDP—Gilbert. DP—Boston 1 (Sogard, Monasterio, Contreras).

San Francisco
Wilkinson L 6-1
Brubaker
Hentges
TrHarris
Boston
Bennett W 8-6
Guerrero
AChapman S 29
Inherited runners scored—Brubaker 1-1, Hentges 1-0. WP—Hentges. Hit by pitch—James Hogue. First—Sean Barber; Second, John Libka; Third, James Hoyer. T—2:35. A—36,278 (37,755).

HOW THE RUNS SCORED

FIRST INNING
GIANTS — Basabe fielded to right fielder Abreu. Devers walked on four pitches. Adames singled to left, Devers to third. Eldridge singled to right, Devers scored, Adames to second. Bericoto singled to left, Adames scored, Eldridge to second. Lee fielded out to left fielder White. Knizner lined out to center fielder Rafaela.
SECOND INNING
GIANTS — Cox homered to left on a 1-0 count. Koss grounded out, third baseman Durbin to first baseman Contreras. Basabe lined out to center fielder Rafaela. Devers struck out.
RED SOX — Sogard homered to left on a full count. Monasterio lined out to center fielder Cox. White struck out. Wong grounded out, third baseman Koss to first baseman Eldridge.
THIRD INNING
RED SOX — Jones tripled to center. Rafaela singled to center, Jones scored. Rafaela stole second. Abreu fielded out to left fielder Bericoto. Contreras fielded out to center fielder Cox. Durbin grounded out, first baseman Eldridge unassisted.
FOURTH INNING
RED SOX — Sogard doubled to left. Monasterio grounded out, second baseman Basabe to first baseman Eldridge. Sogard to third. White popped out. James Hogue hit by a pitch. Wong doubled to left, Sogard scored. Brubaker pitching. Gasper pinch-hitting for Jones. Gasper doubled to right, Wong scored. Rafaela singled to center, Gasper scored. Abreu fielded out to left fielder Bericoto.
SEVENTH INNING
GIANTS — Cox fielded out to right fielder Abreu. Koss hit an infield single to third. On shortstop Monasterio’s throwing error, Koss to third. On right fielder Abreu’s throwing error, Koss scored. Basabe lined out to right fielder Abreu. Devers struck out.

Red Sox 3, Giants 2

Saturday night game
At Fenway Park, Boston
SAN FRAN.	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Bericoto lf	4	0	0	0	0	1	.238
Hill lf	0	0	0	0	1	0	.250
Devers dh	4	0	0	0	1	0	.243
Adames ss	4	1	2	1	1	2	.229
Eldridge 1b	3	0	1	0	2	1	.248
Basabe 2b	4	0	1	0	0	1	.236
Lee rf	4	0	1	0	0	1	.291
Koss 3b	4	0	0	0	0	1	.196
Gilbert cf	4	0	0	0	0	3	.237
Knizner c	4	1	3	1	0	0	.273
Totals	35	2	8	2	5	10
BOSTON	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Sogard 2b	3	0	2	1	2	1	.277
Rafaela cf	3	0	1	0	1	2	.286
Abreu rf	5	0	0	1	0	4	.258
Contreras 1b	4	0	1	0	0	1	.285
Rutschman c	4	0	0	0	0	1	.241
Durbin 3b	3	1	2	1	0	1	.257
Duran lf	3	0	0	0	0	0	.207
a-Jones ph	0	0	0	0	0	0	.203
Monasterio ss	4	1	0	0	0	1	.254
Gasper dh	2	0	1	0	0	0	.254
b-White ph-dh	1	1	1	1	0	0	.286
Totals	32	3	8	3	5	9
San Francisco.....	101 000 000 — 2 8 0
Boston.....	000 000 003 — 3 8 1
a—was hit by a pitch for Duran in 9th, b—singled for Gasper in 9th. E—Rutschman (1). LOB —San Francisco 11, Boston 11. 2B —Sogard (8), Gasper (6). HR —Adames (21), off Sandoval, Knizner (1), off Sandoval. SB —Lee (9). Runners left in scoring position —San Francisco 7 (Eldridge 2, Lee 2, Koss 2, Gilbert), Boston 3 (Abreu, Rutschman 2). RISP —San Francisco 0 for 8, Boston 3 for 9. GIDP —Durbin. DP —San Francisco 1 (Basabe, Adames, Eldridge).
San Francisco	IP	H	R	ER	BB	SO	NP	ERA
Tidwell	5½	3	0	0	2	7	93	3.58
Seymour	1½	2	0	0	1	0	22	5.28
Smith	1	1	1	1	1	2	21	2.96
Hentges BS 3; L 1-6	½	2	2	2	1	0	18	3.56
Boston	IP	H	R	ER	BB	SO	NP	ERA
Sandoval	5½	5	2	2	2	6	93	4.54
Weissert	1	1	0	0	0	2	19	4.01
Moran	1	1	0	0	1	1	23	3.00
Olds W 1-0	1½	1	0	0	2	1	25	0.00
Seymour pitched to 2 batters in the 8th. Smith pitched to 1 batter in the 9th. Inherited runners scored —Seymour 1-0, Smith 2-0, Hentges 1-1, Weissert 1-0, Moran 1-0, Olds 2-0. IBB —off Hentges (Rafaela). HBP —by Tidwell (Gasper), by Hentges (Jones). Umpires —Home, James Hoyer; First, James Jean; Second, Sean Barber; Third, John Libka. T —3:10. A —36,478 (37,755).

HOW THE RUNS SCORED

FIRST INNING
GIANTS — Bericoto grounded out, shortstop Monasterio to first baseman Contreras. Devers fouled out to third baseman Durbin. Adames homered to left on a 1-0 count. Eldridge struck out.
THIRD INNING
GIANTS — Knizner homered to center on a 2-0 count. Bericoto struck out. Devers walked on a full count. Adames singled to left, Devers to third. Eldridge walked on a full count, Adames to second. Basabe struck out. Lee grounded out, first baseman Contreras unassisted.
NINTH INNING
RED SOX — Durbin batted on four pitches. Hentges pitching. Jones pinch-hitting for Durbin. Jones was hit by a pitch. Durbin to second. Monasterio grounded into fielder’s choice, second baseman Basabe unassisted, Durbin to third, Jones out. White pinch-hitting for Gasper. White singled to center, Durbin scored, Monasterio to second. Sogard doubled to left, Monasterio scored. White to third. Rafaela was intentionally walked. Abreu safe on failed fielder’s choice, White scored, Sogard to third, Rafaela to second.

Schwarber HR caps comeback

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kyle Schwarber's MLB-leading 39th homer was a two-run shot with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning as the Phillies rallied from four down and beat the Cardinals, 6-4, in Philadelphia on Sunday.

NOTEBOOK

Schwarber's walkoff blast traveled an estimated 459 feet to center field and punctuated an incredible comeback with six runs in the bottom of the ninth. The win was the Phillies' ninth straight and gave them their third consecutive series sweep.

The Phillies were scoreless through eight when Bryce Harper led off the ninth with his second double of the game. Riley O'Brien (3-5) got two quick outs before J.T. Realmuto singled and Justin Crawford walked to load the bases. That brought up Edmundo Sosa, who cleared the bases with a double down the left-field line that cut the lead to 4-3.

Bryan De La Cruz's RBI single tied it at 4.

Yankees pull away for victory

Ben Rice hit a bases-loaded single to score two runs and cap a three-run sixth inning, and the Yankees pulled away for an 8-3 victory over the Blue Jays in New York.

The Yankees knocked out José Soriano (10-7) by opening the sixth with three singles, including a bunt by Jazz Chisholm Jr. to load the bases. After Braydon Fisher got two outs, Trent Grisham walked.

AL

EAST	W	L	Pct.	GB	WCGB	Last 10	Streak
Tampa Bay	77	53	.592	—	—	3-7	W 1
New York	74	56	.569	3	—	6-4	W 1
Boston	71	59	.546	6	—	7-3	W 3
Toronto	64	68	.485	14	1½	5-5	L 1
Baltimore	63	68	.481	14½	2	5-5	L 1
CENTRAL	W	L	Pct.	GB	WCGB	Last 10	Streak
Chicago	68	62	.523	—	—	6-4	W 1
Cleveland	65	66	.496	3½	—	6-4	W 4
Minnesota	63	68	.481	5½	2	4-6	L 3
Detroit	61	69	.469	7	3½	2-8	L 5
Kansas City	58	74	.439	11	7½	9-1	W 8
WEST	W	L	Pct.	GB	WCGB	Last 10	Streak
Houston	65	66	.496	—	—	4-6	L 2
Texas	65	66	.496	—	—	5-5	W 1
Seattle	62	69	.473	3	3	6-4	L 1
Los Angeles	52	79	.397	13	13	5-5	L 1
Athletics	51	80	.389	14	14	4-6	W 2

NL

	W	L	Pct.	GB	WCGB	Last 10	Streak
Atlanta	76	55	.580	—	—	3-7	W 1
Philadelphia	73	58	.557	3	—	9-1	W 9
Miami	67	64	.511	9	4	5-5	W 3
Washington	61	71	.462	15½	10½	2-8	L 4
New York	59	72	.450	17	12	6-4	L 1
CENTRAL	W	L	Pct.	GB	WCGB	Last 10	Streak
Milwaukee	81	50	.618	—	—	7-3	L 1
Chicago	75	56	.573	6	—	4-6	W 1
St. Louis	66	66	.500	15½	5½	5-5	L 3
Pittsburgh	63	69	.477	18½	8½	5-5	L 3
Cincinnati	62	69	.473	19	9	3-7	L 1
WEST	W	L	Pct.	GB	WCGB	Last 10	Streak
Los Angeles	80	51	.611	—	—	7-3	W 6
San Diego	71	60	.542	9	—	7-3	W 6
Arizona	69	62	.527	11	2	5-5	W 1
San Francisco	52	78	.400	27½	18½	2-8	L 4
Colorado	50	80	.385	29½	20½	3-7	L 6

RESULTS
SUNDAY
At Boston 5	San Francisco 4	At Texas 5		LA Angels 3
At Philadelphia 6	St. Louis 4	Cleveland 7		at Colorado 2
Tampa Bay 3	at Baltimore 1	Chi. Cubs 19		at Seattle 2
At NY Yankees 8	Toronto 3	At San Diego 8		Minnesota 1
At Miami 6	Washington 2	At LA Dodgers 4		Pittsburgh 0
Athletics 7	at Houston 6	At Arizona 5		Cincinnati 3
At Kansas City 11	Detroit 7	Atlanta 4		at Milwaukee 2
At Chi. White Sox 2	NY Mets 1
SATURDAY
At Boston 3	San Francisco 2	NY Mets 10		at Chi. White Sox 5
Toronto 4	at NY Yankees 3	At Seattle 5		Chi. Cubs 4
At Milwaukee 4	Atlanta 1	At Kansas City 3		Detroit 1
At Miami 4	Washington 2	At LA Dodgers 4		Pittsburgh 3
At Philadelphia 12	St. Louis 3	Cincinnati 11		at Arizona 5
LA Angels 3	at Texas 0	Cleveland 4		at Colorado 3
At Baltimore 3 (10 inn.)	Tampa Bay 2	At San Diego 7		Minnesota 5
Athletics 4	at Houston 3

MONDAY'S GAMES
Odds	W-L	ERA	Team	rec.	W-L	ERA	IP	ERA	Last 3 starts
.....2026.....
BOSTON AT MIAMI, 6:40 p.m.
Suarez (L)	-135	5-3	3.41	13-9	0-0	0.0	0.00	1-0	13.1 5.40
TBA	+115	—	—	0-0	0-0	0.0	0.00	0-0	0.0 —
TAMPA BAY AT DETROIT, 6:40 p.m.
Rasmussen (R)	-140	13-5	3.01	15-9	0-0	0.0	0.00	3-0	17.0 3.71
Montero (R)	+120	9-8	3.30	10-11	0-0	0.0	0.00	1-2	17.1 4.15
COLORADO AT WASHINGTON, 6:45 p.m.
Feltner (R)	+165	5-7	5.97	8-11	0-0	0.0	0.00	1-2	15.1 7.04
Carroll (R)	-195	11-5	3.22	13-14	1-0	6.0	0.00	3-0	20.0 1.35
TEXAS AT CHI. WHITE SOX, 7:40 p.m.
Rocker (R)	+110	4-10	4.46	8-14	1-0	6.0	0.00	0-2	13.0 7.62
TBA	-130	—	—	0-0	0-0	0.0	0.00	0-0	0.0 —
CLEVELAND AT LA ANGELS, 9:38 p.m.
Messiah (L)	-160	9-8	2.54	13-12	1-0	6.2	2.70	1-2	19.1 2.33
Urick (R)	+135	8-9	2.80	10-11	0-1	5.0	3.60	1-2	13.1 4.73
CHI. CUBS AT ARIZONA, 9:40 p.m.
Gausman (R)	-145	6-11	4.58	11-15	1-0	6.0	3.00	1-1	16.0 6.19
Kelly (R)	+125	8-11	5.37	9-14	0-1	4.1	12.46	0-2	14.2 7.98
MINNESOTA AT ATHLETICS, 9:40 p.m.
Wheeler (R)	-150	7-8	5.12	9-8	0-1	6.0	3.00	3-0	15.2 4.60
Perkins (R)	+130	2-9	6.96	1-10	0-0	0.0	0.00	0-3	13.1 11.48
PHILADELPHIA AT SEATTLE, 9:40 p.m.
Wheeler (R)	-120	10-4	2.92	15-6	0-0	0.0	0.00	0-2	15.1 5.87
Gilbert (R)	+100	10-7	3.35	16-9	0-0	0.0	0.00	1-2	17.2 2.55
PITTSBURGH AT SAN DIEGO, 9:40 p.m.
Mlodzinski (R)	-110	6-6	4.03	6-6	0-0	0.0	0.00	0-3	8.1 14.04
Ray (L)	+130	11-5	3.20	15-9	1-0	6.0	1.50	1-1	15.0 4.20
CINCINNATI AT SAN FRANCISCO, 9:45 p.m.
Burns (R)	-150	14-2	2.51	18-6	0-0	6.0	0.00	1-1	17.1 3.63
Whitburn (L)	+130	3-4	7.03	3-4	0-0	0.0	0.00	1-2	13.0 7.62
Team rec.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

Rice then singled to right for a 5-2 lead. Chisholm hit a two-run shot in the seventh and Grisham homered in the eighth.

Spencer Jones and Austin Wells had RBI doubles in the second for the Yankees.

Rays avoid sweep

Nick Martinez pitched six innings of one-hit ball, Junior Caminero and Chandler Simpson had RBI singles in the pivotal sixth inning, and the Rays beat the Orioles, 3-1, to avoid a three-game sweep in Baltimore.

The AL East-leading Rays had lost three straight and seven of nine before Martinez (13-4) retired 18 of the 19 batters he faced.

Cam Booser worked a perfect seventh, Kevin Kelly a perfect eighth, and Bryan Baker gave up a leadoff homer to Cowser in the ninth before sealing his 37th save.

Baltimore failed to draw a walk for the first time in 122 games.

Snell starts strong again

Blake Snell threw six scoreless innings and the Dodgers won their sixth straight by easing past the Pirates, 4-0, in Los Angeles.

Snell (2-1) has won consecutive starts and the Dodgers have been victorious in his three appearances in August after he missed three months because of surgery to remove loose bodies in his left elbow. Snell allowed two hits and three walks, and struck out six.

Shohei Ohtani put the Dodgers ahead,

WHITE SOX 2, METS 1
NY METS	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Lindor ss	4	0	2	0	0	0	.235
Bichette 3b	4	0	0	0	0	1	.266
Benge rf	4	1	2	0	0	1	.278
Robert Jr. lf	2	0	1	0	2	1	.225
Wagman 1b	1	0	0	0	0	0	.200
Young ph-1b	3	0	1	1	0	1	.273
Morel dh	1	0	0	0	0	1	.167
Baty ph-dh	1	0	0	0	0	0	.217
Alvarez ph-dh	2	0	0	0	0	2	.235
Semien 2b	3	0	0	0	1	1	.213
Ewing cf	4	0	1	0	0	2	.244
Torrens c	3	0	0	0	0	0	.239
Totals	32	1	7	1	3	10
WHITE SOX	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Antonaci lf	3	0	1	0	0	1	.268
Doyle cf	0	0	0	0	0	0	.194
Murakami 1b	3	0	0	0	1	2	.223
Vargas 3b	3	1	1	0	1	0	.245
Benintendi dh	3	0	1	1	1	1	.246
Acuña pr-dh	0	0	0	0	0	0	.232
BMontgomery rf	3	0	0	0	1	2	.232
CMontgomery ss	4	0	0	0	0	2	.213
Meldroth 2b	4	0	0	0	0	0	.269
Peters cf-lf	4	1	2	1	0	1	.271
Rogers c	3	0	0	0	0	0	.174
Totals	30	2	5	2	4	10
NY Mets.	000	000	011	—	2	0
Chi. White Sox.	000	000	011	—	1	5
LOB—NY Mets 7, Chi. White Sox 8. 2B —Lindor (8), Benge (17), Benintendi (19). HR —Peters (9), off Senga. SB —Peters (7). CS —Young (1). DP —Chi. White Sox.
NY Mets	IP	H	R	ER	BB	SO	ERA
McLean	6	1	0	0	0	6	3.21
Núñez	1	1	0	0	0	1	7.36
Duarte	1	2	1	1	0	3	1.17
Senga L 0-9	½	1	1	1	0	0	7.79
Chi. White Sox	IP	H	R	ER	BB	SO	ERA
Newcomb	2	2	0	0	0	3	2.38
Fiedle	4	3	0	1	0	2	4.18
HagSmith	2	0	0	0	0	3	1.13
Taylor W 6-2	1	2	1	1	2	2	2.12
Newcomb pitched to 1 batter in the 3rd. Fiedle pitched to 2 batters in the 7th. Inherited runners-scored —Fiedle 1-0, HagSmith 2-0. HBP —by McLean (Antonacci). NP —McLean 92, Núñez 15, Duarte 28, Senga 9, Newcomb 38, Fiedle 56, HagSmith 25, Taylor 29. Umpires —Home, Dexter Kelley; First, Quinn Wolcott; Second, Ramon De Jesus; Third, Adrian Johnson. T —2:34. A —27,721 (40,615).

YANKEES 8, BLUE JAYS 3
TORONTO	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Bateman rf	1	3	0	0	0	0	.305
Guerrero Jr. 1b	4	0	0	0	0	0	.262
Kirk c	4	0	1	0	1	0	.283
Valenzuela pr-c	3	0	0	0	0	0	.230
Spranger dh	1	1	1	0	0	0	.240
Okamoto 3b	0	0	0	0	0	0	.230
Clement ss	4	0	0	0	0	0	.284
Cameron lf	3	0	0	0	1	1	.250
McKaddoo 2b	3	1	0	0	1	1	.250
Siroc of	3	1	2	0	0	0	.219
Totals	31	5	3	3	2	5
NY YANKEES	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Grisham cf	4	1	1	2	1	1	.221
Rice dh	5	0	2	2	0	3	.249
Garúa Jr. 1b	3	0	0	0	2	0	.292
Bellinger lf	4	1	1	1	0	2	.258
Lombardi Jr. ss	4	0	0	0	0	0	.233
Jones rf	3	2	2	1	1	1	.233
Chisholm Jr. 2b	4	2	2	2	0	2	.220
Wells c	3	0	1	1	0	2	.179
Caballero 3b	2	0	0	0	0	0	.233
Totals	34	8	11	8	4	11
Toronto	001	10	010	—	3	5
NY Yankees	020	003	21x	—	8	11	1
E—Lombardi Jr. (4), LOB—Toronto 15, NY Yankees 7. 2B—Springer (16), Okamoto (20), Straw 2 (16), Jones (8), Wells (7), HR—Grisham (18), Wells (1), Woods Richardson, Chisholm Jr. (18), off Little. CS —Cameron (1). SF —Bateman, Cameron. DP —Toronto 1.
Toronto	IP	H	R	ER	BB	SO	ERA
Soriano L 10-7	5	5	5	3	7	3	4.63
Fisher	½	1	0	0	0	0	3.63
Fulharty	½	1	0	0	0	0	3.63
Little	1	2	2	2	0	2	9.00
Woods Richardson	1	1	1	1	0	1	5.95
NY Yankees	IP	H	R	ER	BB	SO	ERA
Rodón	4	2	2	1	2	2	3.15
Woods Richardson W 5-2	2	1	1	0	0	1	1.73
Yarborough	1½	2	1	1	0	1	3.42
Headrick	1½	1	0	0	0	2	1.49
J.Soriano pitched to 3 batters in the 6th. Inherited runners-scored —Fisher 3-1, Fulharty 3-2, Headrick 1-0. NP —Fisher (16), Soriano (Wells), Headrick (10), Rodón 7, Fulharty 7, Little 14, Woods Richardson 21, Rodón 76, Blackburn 25, Yarborough 26, Headrick 16.
Umpires —Home, Louie Krupa; First, Jerome Reher; Second, Adam Becker; Third, Dan Iassogna. T —2:49. A —41,802 (46,672).

RAYS 3, ORIOLES 1
TAMPA BAY	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Diaz dh	4	1	1	0	0	0	.306
Aranda 1b	4	1	1	0	0	0	.280
Camminero 3b	3	1	1	1	1	0	.250
Hicks 2b	3	1	1	1	1	0	.250
Piper pr-c	0	0	0	0	0	0	.270
Simpson lf	3	0	2	1	1	1	.310
DeLuca rf	4	0	1	0	0	0	.268
Mullins cf	2	1	2	0	0	0	.244
Palacios 2b	3	0	0	0	0	0	.218
Wells ss	3	0	0	0	0	1	.218
Totals	31	3	7	2	5	3
BALTIMORE	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Holliday 2b	4	0	0	0	0	0	.229
Alonso 1b	4	0	0	0	0	0	.270
Camminero ss	3	0	0	0	0	0	.236
Basallo c	3	0	0	0	0	0	.212
Mayo dh	3	0	0	0	0	0	.241
Beavers lf	3	0	0	0	0	0	.229
E-Sprague cf	2	0	0	0	0	0	.241
Cowser cf	3	1	2	1	0	0	.219
Taveras rf	3	0	0	0	0	0	.226
Totals	30	1	2	1	0	5
Tampa Bay	000	003	000	—	3	7	1
Baltimore	000	001	001	—	2	0
LOB—Tampa Bay 6, Baltimore 2.
2B—Cowser (5), HR—Cowser (12), off Baker. CS —Simpson (13), DeLuca (6). DP —Baltimore 2.

SportsLog

Freedom ejected at WNBA tilt

Former NBA center Enes Kanter Freedom was ejected from Sunday night's Indiana-Chicago WNBA game after he was confronted by Sky guard Natasha Cloud late in the third quarter. Freedom was sitting along the baseline wearing a black shirt that read "WOMAN noun. adult human female." During a timeout, Cloud, 34, started yelling and pointing at Freedom, 34, as she approached him. A standing Freedom held his arms out and took one step on the court as security and a handful of Sky players moved in between the two. Freedom and Royce White, another former NBA player, have declared themselves eligible for the WNBA draft, saying they identify as women. The WNBA has been the subject of recent debates on whether transgender women — people assigned male at birth who transition to align with their gender identity — should be allowed to participate in the league.

Thompson to Heat official

Former Warriors star Klay Thompson has signed his deal with the Heat, who waited patiently for weeks to see if they would get the chance to add the sharpshooter to their reworked roster. Thompson, 36 and fourth on the NBA's 3-pointers made list, cleared waivers Sunday and wasted no time signing a two-year deal with Miami worth about $11.5 million.

TENNIS

Gauff, Fils take wins in Cincy

Coco Gauff beat fellow American Jessica Pegula, 6-2, 6-4, to capture her second Cincinnati Open title, and Frenchman Arthur Fils topped American Frances Tiafoe, 6-3, 1-6, 6-0, in the men's final for his first Masters 1000 title. The last time two American women played in the final was in 1970. Gauff, the 2023 Cincy winner, evened her personal series with Pegula, 5-5. The men's final was the first time two Black players have met in an ATP Masters 1000 final, and Fils became only the third Black player to win one.

School football starting fresh

►SCHOOL FOOTBALL

Continued from Page C1

Anthony Viazakis. A former star linebacker at Bishop Feehan and Bridgewater State, Viazakis coached Milford from 2017-19 and has been on the KP staff since 2022. Matt Wasel left his 20-year post as KP defensive coordinator to coach his son, Chase, as defensive coordinator at Walpole, his alma mater . . . After a year away from coaching, former North Andover coach John Dubzinski takes over at Central Catholic. Dubzinski was 54-41 in 10 seasons at North Andover following a five-year run at Arlington, leading North Andover to its first Super Bowl title in 2018 . . . Among the 36-plus new coaches across the MIAA, former Lowell star Joseph Harris ('07) is at his alma mater following a resurgence under Scott Boyle, and Brockton alumnus Mike Norman Jr. ('19) takes the reins for the Boxers . . . Former Arlington star Frank Roche accepted the head job at Belmont Hill and Johnathan Nascimen-to is Arlington's new coach . . . Three-time Super Bowl champion Matthew Slater joined Paul Zukauskas's BC High staff.

■ Transfer portal: After a 1,000-yard rushing, 1,000-yard receiving double at Tri-County, Nick O'Brien will carry the mail for North Attleborough.

Senior quarterback Brayden Jones has moved to Foxborough after starting at Attleboro. Another Division 5 contender got stronger as Hanover star Brendan Sacco transferred home after a year at Thayer.

But the ISL took far more players from MIAA contenders, including eight from D2 champion Catholic Memorial, headlined by linebacker Liam Conlon (Tabor) and receiver Jordan Barros (Milton Academy). Talented twins from Florida, Kingston and Christian Rust, moved to Boston and will play for John DiBiasio at CM, with the 6-foot-3-inch, 212-pound Kingston likely to start at quarterback. Malden Catholic lost top-tier edge rusher Jeremiah Figaro to Dexter Southfield and quarterback Dominik Mercier to Peabody. Wellesley quarterback Jack Cullinan went to St. Mark's and reclassified. Versatile athlete Blake Nelson and promising quarterback Hudson Garrity (41 total TDs as a freshman) moved to Milton Academy from Archbishop Williams.

■ Latched schedules and new matchups: With MIAA power rankings placing increased emphasis on strength of schedule, coaches continue to schedule aggressively. An-

Globe Top 20

No.	Team	Rec.	Last
1.	Xaverian	0-0	-
2.	St. John's Prep	0-0	-
3.	Catholic Memorial	0-0	-
4.	Central Catholic	0-0	-
5.	King Philip	0-0	-
6.	Scituate	0-0	-
7.	North Attleborough	0-0	-
8.	Shawsheen	0-0	-
9.	Mansfield	0-0	-
10.	Tewksbury	0-0	-
11.	Bishop Feehan	0-0	-
12.	Milton	0-0	-
13.	Duxbury	0-0	-
14.	Foxborough	0-0	-
15.	St. John's (S)	0-0	-
16.	Barnstable	0-0	-
17.	Walpole	0-0	-
18.	Methuen	0-0	-
19.	Hanover	0-0	-
20.	Norwell	0-0	-

dover opens against Catholic Memorial and North Attleborough is hosting Springfield Central in Week 2. Defending Division 4 champion Scituate starts with rivals Duxbury and Norwell before facing Marblehead in the first meeting between the programs. Also in Week 1, D4 finalist Tewksbury travels to D5 finalist Foxborough for the first matchup between those perennial contenders.

■ Xaverian in uncharted waters: Scoring three consecutive Division 1 Super Bowls is unprecedented in the modern playoff format. Xaverian is looking to become the first D1 program to win four straight and with senior quarterback Will Wood under center, the Hawks have a chance. Their main competition should be rival St. John's Prep.

The Catholic Conference continues to round into form around those contenders, with Catholic Memorial favored to win D2, BC High looking to bounce back after a down year, Malden Catholic on the rise, and Saint John's (Shrewsbury) returning 18 of 22 starters.

■ College commitments: Following an epic duel in the D1 Super Bowl, Wood and St. John's Prep quarterback Chris Vargas have made their college decisions. Wood committed to Penn State in May and Vargas — the top quarterback in the Class of 2028 per Rivals — decided on Ohio State.

Wood's top target last year, Christian McIntyre, will play at Ohio University after his postgraduate year at Avon Old Farms. Xaverian senior line-

SOCCER

Maresca debuts with win

Manchester City produced a stirring late rally in coach Enzo Maresca's first Premier League match in charge, scoring twice in the final 10 minutes for a 2-1 home win over Bournemouth. Josko Gvardiol scored the winner in the first minute of added time, which was initially called offside before video review. Marc Guehi had equalized with a 84th-minute header from a corner. Elsewhere in the EPL, Dominik Szoboszlai converted a penalty in the ninth minute of stoppage time to salvage a 2-2 draw for Liverpool at Newcastle . . . Barcelona began its Spanish La Liga defense with a 5-0 win at Elche, with Raphinha and Fermín López each scoring twice.

MISCELLANY

Minin tops Boston Triathlon

Jacob Minin denied MIT graduate Milo Knowles a repeat title in the elite men's field of the Boston Triathlon in South Boston. The race in the Olympic distance — a 0.9-mile swim, 22.94-mile bike, and 6.2-mile run — started and ended at Mother's Rest Fields at Carson Beach, with Manin (1:46:33) beating Knowles by roughly seven minutes. Taylor Larson, who competed in the women's 30-34 age bracket, recorded the fastest female time with a 2:09:08. Jackie Loverme, from Barrington, R.I., was the top elite female (2:12:13) . . . Ticara Geldenhuis and Lexi Hastings both homered, Kate Blunt tossed five frames of two-run ball, and the Boston Hunters (4-6) took advantage of three Los Angeles errors to take a 7-3 win over the Queens (5-5) in WPBL action . . . Defending drivers' champion Lando Norris won the Dutch Grand Prix at Zandvoort for back-to-back Formula 1 victories, after passing points leader Kimi Antonelli with a daring move on lap 54 of 72. Antonelli finished second after his Mercedes teammate, George Russell, was ordered to move out of his way.

backer Michael Harden Jr. committed to Boston College and offensive tackle Jack Warren committed to Villanova. Central Catholic's two-way lineman, Brian Waller-Reitano, committed to Navy and his quarterback, Caden Smith, will play at Bentley.

Springfield Central stars Isaiah Rogers (Notre Dame) and Jareth Staine (Stonehill), along with Lowell's 6-3 receiver Collin Christiansen (New Haven) and Weymouth standout lineman Tyandre Monteiro (Stonehill) have committed. Names to watch include: Jack Luccarelli (Norwell), Will Harrison (Tewksbury), and Riley Selvais (St. John's Prep).

■ Reset button: Contenders replacing large classes will have to reset. King Philip graduated 26 seniors, including all 11 starters on offense, so 6-5 senior Brody Zolak steps in at quarterback to lead a new cast.

Tewksbury turns the page after graduating 18 starters. Cohasset graduated 16 after riding Gus Greene and a great senior class to a D7 Super Bowl title. Coming off its first NEC title behind a huge senior class, Masconomet returns zero starters. St. Mary's (Lynn) graduated 23 seniors, including 17 starters, and Bishop Feehan replaces 27 seniors after a run to the D2 Super Bowl.

■ Co-ops and league standings: There are 268 MIAA programs, with a few new co-ops. Triton and Ipswich have joined forces and will compete in the Cape Ann Baker. Dedham joins Sharon in the Hockomock Kelley-Rex Division, and Stoughton shifts to the Kelley-Rex, while King Philip moves to the Hockomock Davenport.

Cathedral is hosting Roxbury Prep and competing in the Central Catholic League, which has six teams following the departure of Bishop Feehan and St. Mary's. Outside of Eastern Mass., Littleton is joining Ayer-Shirley and St. Bernard's is hosting St. Paul (Worcester).

■ Rule changes and points of emphasis: There have been a few tweaks to the national federation handbook. Slapping the helmet is now illegal for both offensive and defensive players. Skill players can wear play cards on their belts in addition to their wrist or forearm.

Game officials are tasked with cracking down on flagrant and unsportsmanlike fouls, and with controlling sideline behavior to avoid incidents with coaches. The biggest impact to live play is an emphasis on assisting the ball carrier with a clear push or pull.

Baseball

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE

EAST
	W	L	Pct.	GB
Durham	30	19	.612	—
Rochester	30	20	.600	2½
Scranton/W.-Barre	27	20	.574	2
Worcester	27	22	.551	3
Buffalo	26	23	.531	4
Lehigh Valley	25	23	.524	4½
Syracuse	24	24	.500	5
Charlotte	25	25	.500	5½
Jacksonville	20	29	.408	10
Norfolk	17	30	.362	12

WEST
	W	L	Pct.	GB
Indianapolis	30	20	.600	—
St. Paul	30	20	.600	—
Columbus	24	24	.500	5
Omaha	24	24	.500	5
Nashville	24	25	.490	5½
Toledo	24	26	.480	6
Greenwinet	23	27	.460	7
Memphis	22	28	.438	8
Iowa	21	29	.420	9
Louisville	18	32	.360	12

SUNDAY'S RESULTS
At Syracuse 2		Worcester 0
At Columbus 8		St. Paul 5
At Buffalo 10		Lehigh Valley 2
At Gwinnett 7		Durham 2
At Scranton/W.-Barre 9		Charlotte 5
At Indianapolis 6		Louisville 0
Iowa 4		at Toledo 2
Jacksonville 6		at Memphis 2
Nashville 7		at Norfolk 1
Rochester 9		at Omaha 0

SATURDAY'S RESULTS
At Syracuse 3		Worcester 0
Nashville 0 (susp.)		at Norfolk 0
Durham 3		at Gwinnett 2
Charlotte 9		at Scranton/W.-Barre 6
Louisville 5		at Indianapolis 4
Rochester 7		at Omaha 2
Iowa 7		at Toledo 3
St. Paul 15		at Columbus 11
At Memphis 10		Jacksonville 0
Lehigh Valley		at Buffalo 0
Nashville		at Norfolk 0

Syracuse, 2-0

At NBT Bank Stadium, Syracuse, N.Y.
Worcester	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Kner-Faelt ss	4	0	0	0	0	1	.077
Story dh	4	0	0	0	1	1	.190
Eaton lf	4	0	0	0	0	1	.264
Romero 3b	3	0	1	0	1	0	.230
Arias 2b	3	0	1	0	1	0	.292
Campbell rf	4	0	1	0	1	1	.244
Castro ph	1	0	0	0	0	0	.243
Harris lb	3	0	0	0	0	0	.270
Baez c	2	0	0	0	0	0	.000
Ward cf	3	0	0	0	0	0	.237
Totals	30	0	2	0	2	3

SYRACUSE
Worcester	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Morabito cf	4	0	2	0	1	1	.267
Pitre 2b	3	0	1	0	1	1	.161
Amick lb	4	0	0	0	0	3	.100
Mauricio 3b	3	0	0	0	1	0	.281
Lorusso dh	3	0	1	0	1	0	.224
Ramos rf	4	1	2	0	1	1	.271
Smith lf	2	1	1	2	1	0	.370
Ross c	2	0	0	0	1	1	.168
Totals	30	2	6	2	5	6

Worcester
Worcester	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Burgos	5	4	0	0	3	4	.514
Martinez	2	1	2	1	1	1	.550
McWilliams	1	0	0	1	1	1	.571

Syracuse
Syracuse	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Curry	4½	2	0	0	1	0	.384
Weisenburger	3	0	0	0	1	1	.683
Franklin	½	0	0	0	1	1	.419
Ross	1	0	0	0	1	1	.127

HP—by Curry. WP—Ross. T—2:17. A—5,565.

EASTERN LEAGUE

NORTHEAST
	W	L	Pct.	GB
Reading	28	21	.571	—
Binghamton	26	24	.520	2½
Somerset	26	24	.520	2½
New Hampshire	25	25	.500	3½
Portland	20	30	.400	8½
Hartford	18	32	.360	10½

SOUTHWEST
	W	L	Pct.	GB
Erie	34	16	.680	—
Cheapeake	27	22	.551	6½
Tellico 3b	26	23	.531	7½
Harrisburg	23	23	.500	8
Akron	22	26	.458	11
Altoona	19	30	.388	14½

SUNDAY'S RESULTS
Reading 10		at Portland 3
At Binghamton 7		Altoona 3
At Akron 8		Harrisburg 4
Richmond 6		at Chesapeake 5
Somerset 9		at Hartford 6
At Erie 6		New Hampshire 3

SATURDAY'S RESULTS
Reading 5		at Portland 2
At Erie 7		New Hampshire 0
At Binghamton 4		Altoona 0
Somerset 9		at Hartford 5
At Chesapeake 4		Richmond 3
Harrisburg		at Akron

Reading, 10-3

At Delta Dental Park at Hadlock Field, Portland, Maine
READING	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
Rincon ss	4	3	0	0	1	2	.267
Leon cf	3	1	1	0	1	1	.292
Heredia rf	4	1	0	0	1	1	.283
Bineles 1b	2	2	1	2	2	1	.273
Tellico 3b	3	1	1	3	1	1	.324
DeMartini dh	4	1	2	0	3	0	.261
Ricketts c	4	0	1	0	1	0	.225
Ware lf	3	0	0	1	0	1	.254
Ritter 2b	2	1	0	0	2	2	.235
Totals	29	10	9	10	7	10

PORTLAND
PORTLAND	AB	R	H	BI	BB	SO	Avg.
McDonough 3b	4	0	1	0	1	0	.210
Anthony lf	3	0	0	0	1	0	.273
Winney 1b	2	0	0	0	0	0	.261
Rosario 1b	1	0	0	0	0	0	.268
Garcia c	3	0	0	0	0	0	.276
Blais dh	3	0	0	0	0	0	.167
Bleis dh	2	1	1	0	0	0	.237
White 2b	1	0	0	0	2	1	.207
Ferguson rf	1	0	1	0	1	0	.252
Taylor cf	2	0	0	0	1	2	.188

Higher ed is at a turning point.

Make sense of it with College Town, our new weekly newsletter.

From AI and enrollment declines to funding cuts and falling public trust, we're unpacking what's changing and what comes next.

Sign up for free at Globe.com/collegetown

College Town

The Boston Globe
Globe Opinion

Remembered

SHARE YOUR MEMORIES ON OUR GUEST BOOK AT BOSTON.COM/OBITUARIES

BY CITY AND TOWN

BOSTON CHUNG, Richard S.K.	PEABODY TRUESDALE, Marguerite
LYNN CHUNG, Richard S.K.	SAUGUS CHUNG, Richard S.K.
MELROSE TRUESDALE, Marguerite
NORTH READING TRUESDALE, Marguerite	OUT OF STATE

CHUNG, Richard S.K.

Of Saugus, formerly of Boston and Lynn, former City of Boston Inspectional Service Administrator and Kowloon bartender. Loving father of Christopher Chung and wife, Melissa, Amanda Chung and husband, Brendan, Nicolette Chung; and one grandchild, Riley. Dear brother of Joyce Chung, Janice O'Neill, Robert Chung and the late Roney Chung. In lieu of flowers, donations in his memory may be made to the New England Foundation for the Arts. Relatives and friends are invited to attend Visiting Hours in the Bisbee-Porcella Funeral Home, 549 Lincoln Ave., SAUGUS, on Thursday, August 27, 4-7 p.m. A Funeral service will be held in the funeral home, on Friday, August 28, at 11 a.m. For directions and obit, www.BisbeePorcella.com

Announcements

SHEET METAL WORKERS' LOCAL UNION 17

Mourns the loss of retired member Patrick Hughes who passed away on August 14, 2026. He was a member of Local 17 for 67 years.

Sadly missed but not forgotten.

Russell Bartash
President

Announcements

SPRINKLER FITTERS LOCAL #550

We regret to announce the death of Brother James Louis Carter, Jr. Visitation will be held at the Dolan Funeral Home, 1140 Washington Street, DORCHES-TER LOWER MILLS, on Wednes-day, August 26 from 10:00am - 11:00am. Funeral Service to begin at 11:00am, with an in-terment at Fairview Cemetery.

Peter Gibbons
Business Manager
Secretary-Treasurer

TRUESDALE, Marguerite

Marguerite Morgan (Hyde) Truesdale, of Peabody, passed away August 18, 2026. She was the beloved wife of Paul Truesdale, with whom she shared almost 59 years of marriage. Besides her husband, Paul, she is survived by her three children: son, Kenneth and his wife, Tracy Coleman; daughter, Laura Doble and her husband, Gregory; son, Derek and his wife, Sabra; and her seven grandchildren. Also leaving 3 siblings and several loving nieces, nephews and cousins. Relatives and friends are cordially invited to attend Visiting Hours at Mackey Funeral Home (128 S Main St., MIDDLETON, MA 01949) on Sunday, August 30th, from 2 to 5 p.m. Her Funeral Mass will be held at St. Adelaide's Church (708 Lowell St., Peabody, MA 01960) on Monday, August 31st, at 10:30 a.m. (Kindly meet at church.) Burial will follow at Puritan Lawn Memorial Park at Lake St., Peabody. Visit www.mackeyfuneralhome.com for complete details.

Mackey Funeral Home
www.mackeyfuneralhome.com

Funeral Services

ST. MICHAEL
CEMETERY & CREMATORY

500 Canterbury St. The Respectful Way ð
Boston, MA 02131 617-524-1036

www.stmichaelcemetery.com

CANNIFF MONUMENT
(617) 323-3690
800-439-3690 • 617-876-9110
531 Cummings Highway, Roslindale
583 Mt. Auburn Street, Cambridge
MON-FRI 9-9; SAT 9-5, SUNDAY 12-5

Show respect

View The Boston Globe's complete list of death notices and sign the guestbook at boston.com/obituaries.

How will you be remembered?

You talk about many things with your loved ones: from day-to-day details to big events. Sharing stories with those who matter most isn't just important today; it will be especially significant when it's time to honor and commemorate your lives.

Memorialization at the end of life is more than it used to be. It can reflect a person's life story and be transformative, healing and comforting.

Meaningful memorialization starts when loved ones talk about what matters most: memories made, lessons learned and how they hope to be remembered.

Download a free brochure and Have the Talk of a Lifetime today. It can make the difference of a lifetime.

talkofalifetime.org

Have theTalk of a Lifetime®

Massachusetts Funeral
MFDA
Directors Association

Bring your memories to life

Capture them in a book for your loved ones

As the world's leading private memoir service, we have enabled thousands of people to read the life stories of their loved ones. We will listen to your stories in face-to-face interviews and turn them into a handcrafted, heirloom-quality book. Now is the time to tell your story.

Find out how—call us on 1-844-940-2719
or visit lifebookmemoirs.com

Obituaries

Carlo Borlenghi, who made sailing photography into an art form, at 70

By Trip Gabriel

NEW YORK TIMES

Carlo Borlenghi, who elevated yacht racing photography into an art form, shooting sailboats from startling angles and framing breathtaking compositions of sea and sky, died Aug. 3 in Lecco, Italy. He was 70.

His death, at a hospital, was caused by an abdominal infection, his wife, Alessandra Tanghetti, said. The couple lived on Lake Como, in Bellano, where Mr. Borlenghi was born and first photographed friends in sailboat races.

He would go on to spend four decades shooting yachting’s top competitions, including the America’s Cup and the Whitbread Round the World Race (now the Ocean Race), and would be recognized as one of the world’s finest photographers of sailboat races, a rarefied niche in which he had few peers.

A yacht is often just a small detail in a Mr. Borlenghi image, a trace of human artifice in a panorama of heavy cloud banks, swirling turquoise ocean, fire-hose sprays of water and clusters of seabirds.

“He was always thinking of images, not just boats,” Guy Gurney, a photographer who shot races with Mr. Borlenghi beginning in the 1980s, said in an interview. “Carlo just got better and better. Suddenly he was producing art, when the rest of us were just illustrating.”

Mr. Borlenghi shot one race’s crowded start from the viewpoint of a lighthouse lantern room, a large Fresnel lens visible in the foreground. He captured a heeled-over yacht crashing through the waves from a vantage point on the waterline, the boat nearly obscured by spindrift.

And although he did not know how to swim, he never hesitated to climb onto one of the small chase boats used by photographers or to board a helicopter to get a bird’s-eye view. He understood racing tactics as if he were at the helm of one of the boats he photographed.

“He knew where the pressure would build on a start line, when the spray would explode from a bow, when a helmsman’s glance revealed victory or defeat,” Magnus Wheatley, a sailing historian, wrote after Mr. Borlenghi’s death. “His images carried movement, atmosphere and humanity in equal measure.”

Mr. Borlenghi was one of a handful of media jet-setters who dominated coverage of international yachting, especially the America’s Cup, as boats evolved from deep-keeled 39-foot sloops to barely-in-the-water hydrofoils resembling race cars.

Not every day on the water produced pulse-pounding action. A monthslong America’s Cup competition included plenty of tedious moments when racing was abandoned for lack of wind. Mr. Borlenghi still found ways to frame an imaginative image, Sharon Green, a sailing photographer who worked alongside him, recalled in an interview.

“In challenging situations — bad weather or no wind or no light,” she said, “I think, ‘What would Carlo do?’”

Carlo Borlenghi was born July 10, 1956, in Bellano, a small town on the eastern side of Lake Como, to Andrea and Rosa (Conforti) Borlenghi. His father owned a multigenerational plumbing business that he hoped his son would take over one day.

Instead, Carlo developed a passion for photography. He would try to sell the photos he shot of races on Lake Como to the sailboats’ crew members, who were his friends. One day, a journalist who saw those images invited him to meet the editors of Uomo Mare, a boating magazine based in Milan. The magazine eventually sent him on assignments covering regattas around the world.

In addition to doing photojournalism, Mr. Borlenghi became the in-house photographer for Italy’s entries in the America’s Cup, starting in 1983 with the yacht Azzurra in Newport, R.I. He went on to document the campaigns of multiple iterations of America’s Cup boats christened Luna Rossa that were owned by Patrizio Bertelli, the CEO of Prada, from 2000 in Auckland, New Zealand, through 2024 in Barcelona, Spain.

In 1989, Mr. Borlenghi founded his own photographic agency, Sea & See Italia. More recently, his work was represented by Studio Borlenghi, which he ran with Tanghetti, whom he married in 1994.

In addition to her, he leaves

CARLO BORLENGHI/ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE

CARLO BORLENGHI/ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE

his mother and a brother, Luciano.

During the COVID pandemic, Mr. Borlenghi improvised a studio in the middle of Bellano and invited each of the town’s residents to sit for a portrait. He photographed 1,800 people and published a book of those portraits, “Il Ritratto di Bellano,” in 2022.

Gurney recalled how Mr. Borlenghi was constantly searching for fresh material. At an America’s Cup regatta in the 1990s, he said, one of the racing teams announced a news conference to unveil a new keel, an event of minimal interest. Mr. Borlenghi’s attention was soon wandering.

“I looked around and there was Carlo: He’d gone away from the rest of us and was outside taking a picture of a man holding his bicycle,” Gurney said. “The man was standing by a tree in the most beautiful light. I hadn’t even noticed. There was no boat in the picture.”

He added, “Carlo always had his eyes open for something else going on.”

Yacht racing photographer Mr. Borlenghi captured much more than just the boat with his pictures.

CARLO BORLENGHI/ASSOCIATED PRESS/ACM 2007/FILE

Yvette Roudy, 97, ardent feminist who served as France’s first minister for women’s rights

By Adam Nossiter

NEW YORK TIMES

Yvette Roudy, a tenacious feminist who successfully championed state reimbursement for abortions in her role as France’s first minister of women’s rights, died on Tuesday in Cabestany, outside Perpignan, on the Mediterranean coast of France. She was 97.

Her death, at a nursing home, was announced by President Emmanuel Macron of France, who saluted her for “a life spent making equality between men and women a real right” and for her “untiring capacity for indignation.”

The 1982 law that Ms. Roudy (pronounced ROO-dee) supported, guaranteeing that women’s abortions would be covered by France’s national medical insurance, united two of her passions: the rights of women and the fight against economic inequality.

Abortion had been legal in France since 1975, but it was available only to women with the means to seek it. That rankled Ms. Roudy, a lifelong Socialist with a working-class background. And as the woman in charge of a newly created ministry, she could do something about it.

“I thought, since this law existed,” she recalled in a 2008 interview with France Culture radio, referring to the 1975 law legalizing abortion, “it should be open to everyone, not just those who could afford it.”

She added: “This was an inequality requiring a measure of social justice.”

HERVE MERLIAC/ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE

Ms. Roudy (right), pictured in 1981 in Paris, fought to make contraception more widely available.

Every week for months, she said, she hounded the new French president, her longtime ally François Mitterrand, reminding him of his campaign promise to reimburse women for their abortions, even as the Roman Catholic Church lobbied him in an attempt to thwart her.

“He was very annoyed,” Ms. Roudy said, but “he finally gave in.”

That persistence was the hallmark of a career that began unpromisingly, under the thumb of a chauvinist father, in Ms. Roudy’s telling. Her feminism, she said, sprang from her early resistance to the status quo — an inequality between the sexes that felt stifling in the small town outside Bordeaux where she grew up.

“I had to become what I eventually became on my own,” she told France Culture.

Ms. Roudy’s two other major initiatives under Mitterrand encountered mixed success. A 1983 law calling for professional parity between the sexes — in hiring and salaries — remained largely “a dead letter,” the newspaper Libération wrote this past week. There was no enforcement mechanism, Ms. Roudy said in a 2019 interview with Le Parisien, and employers “had no desire to enforce it.”

She had better luck with her determination to make contraception more widely available, bringing the issue to the attention of every French household with an advertisement directed by the filmmaker Agnès Varda that was broadcast on primetime television. Again, the Catholic Church lobbied against her.

But she knew what she was up against. “Machismo in France is stronger,” she told The New York Times in 1985, comparing the situation in her own country unfavorably with what she thought prevailed in the United States.

Even so, she was dismissive of the idea that condescending treatment of women was simply a matter of culture — French culture, specifically.

“I have no idea if there is such a thing as ‘French gallantry,’ and to tell you the truth, I’m not in the least bit interested,” she told the magazine Le Nouvel Obs in 2018. “What I want is for men to stop rubbing themselves up against women in the metro, among other things, and that they stop thinking they are naturally superior.”

Yvette Saldou was born on April 10, 1929, in Pessac, the youngest of three children of Jeanne (Dicharry) Saldou and Joseph Saldou, a metalworker who had been disabled by injuries in World War I and was employed by the municipal government.

When Yvette was 12, her mother died. Under pressure from her father, who saw no need for her to pursue further education, she left school at 16 to work as a secretary at a local fish-processing factory.

She began studying at night for her baccalauréat — roughly equivalent to a high school diploma and all-important in France — and finally obtained it at 26.

In 1951, she married Pierre Roudy, a teacher who later became the head of one of France’s national theater schools, and they moved to Scotland, where he had obtained a teaching job.

She learned English as well, and when they returned to France in 1955, she became friendly with the feminist Colette Audry. In 1964, Audry suggested that Ms. Roudy translate “The Feminine Mystique,” Betty Friedan’s recently published and hugely influential book expressing the frustrations of women who felt trapped or subordinated in domestic roles.

“I was already a feminist, by intuition,” she told Libération in 2019. “But doing this translation allowed me to give words to what I was feeling deep inside.”

Through Audry, she met Mitterrand, who was running as a Socialist in a failed bid for the presidency in 1965, and her own career in politics began.

Ms. Roudy was serving as a Socialist deputy in the European Parliament by the time Mitterrand finally became president in 1981 and appointed her as the women’s rights minister, a position that she held until 1986.

Afterward, she went on to serve two stints as a member of the French parliament from the Calvados department in Normandy, from 1988 to 1993 and from 1997 to 2002. She also served as the mayor of the Norman town Lisieux from 1989 to 2001.

Pierre Roudy died in 2012. Ms. Roudy has no immediate survivors.

After she left government service, Ms. Roudy continued to be regularly consulted by successors to the ministerial position she had held and by journalists eager for her views on the progress of women in France.

The #MeToo movement, she told Le Nouvel Obs in 2018, was “making the patriarchy tremble.”

But she hadn’t lost her hard-headed realism about who was calling the shots in French politics.

As she had observed on the television program “Apostrophes” more than three decades earlier, when her book “À Cause d’Elles” (loosely translated as “Thanks to the Women”) came out, “All the rules have been dictated by men. They made all this stuff up in the backrooms of bistros.”

The Boston Globe

POWER PLAY

Shirley Leung

Jon Chesto

Your inside scoop on business and power in Boston

Sign up for Power Play, our new twice-a-week subscriber-exclusive newsletter filled with original reporting and sharp analysis that reveal how power and business really work in Massachusetts.

Get it now at Globe.com/powerplay

‘Sham peer reviews’ and harassment: Challenges abound for women doctors.

Dr. Paula Muto has been in medicine for more than 30 years. And she has seen woman after woman pushed out of medical leadership. They’ve had their performance questioned, their leadership styles doubted, and even their appearances put under a microscope.

“Even women physicians who’ve risen to as high as CEO have not survived it,” Muto, a North Andover-based surgeon, notes.

For years, research has

KARA MILLER
THE BIG IDEA

shown that female doctors frequently experience bullying and discrimination, which can make securing — and staying in — medical leadership roles particularly difficult.

As of 2023, women accounted for over half — 55 percent — of US medical students and 45 percent of medical school faculty members, but only 25 percent of department chairs, according to a 2025 article in JAMA Network Open.

A 2024 article in the same journal found that “Compared with men, women [medical school] deans reported having to work harder to advance, while receiving less support and opportunities for leadership positions by their own institutions.”

Muto recalls that about a decade ago a surgeon arrived in town who targeted a well-loved female chief of surgery. He saw her “case volume, and wanted it.” What came next, said Muto, was a “sham peer review,” a practice in which a colleague falsely accuses a doctor of misconduct on the job.

As a colleague, Muto reviewed the cases in which the chief of surgery was accused of a breach in the standard of care. She said she found there was none. “She just happened to be on call for a couple of complicated patients.”

But the ordeal was too much for the chief of surgery. She resigned, then left medicine.

Muto once considered becoming chief of surgery at a hospital. When she met resistance from leadership, she started a company instead.

Suddenly, she found herself at conferences with other female doctors. “I started to talk to women, and we started to share our stories. And everyone had the same story.” When the women spoke, she said, they talked about “everything from sexual harassment to personal harassment to sham peer reviews. And then you realized: ‘Oh my God, this problem is national.’”

None of this surprises Sarah Temkin, a surgeon and the director of the documentary “1001 Cuts” about challenges facing female surgeons.

Temkin once served as a hospital division director, in charge of gynecologic oncology. But she said, “Even though I had a title, I called it ‘responsibility without authority.’” Temkin said that women commonly raise safety concerns, but they are often not

THE BIG IDEA, Page D3

“You cannot do real estate without marketing yourself. Your goal is to talk to your audience.”

KATHERINE KRANENBURG, micro-influencer and realtor

DAVID L. RYAN/GLOBE STAFF

Katherine Kranenburg, who advocates for more realtors to use AI, completes a luxury listing of hers, a condo in Newton.

Home influencer

By Redmond Bernhold
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

NEWTON — At Moments Cafe, a sleek new Newton coffee shop, Newton Mayor Marc Laredo posed for a picture between owners Tai Huynh and Phuong Nguyen. In front of them, Katherine Kranenburg lifted her pointer finger. Taking two steps back, she positioned her phone for the most flattering angle.

“I’m very picky about my photos,” said Kranenburg, a longtime real estate agent, with a chuckle. “I don’t like the sun.”

Newton real estate agent is one of many using social media and AI to sell houses

Kranenburg snapped a few shots and recorded the hubbub, later posting a clip to her Instagram profile, with the account name movemetoboston. Soon after, she left the coffee shop and drove 10 minutes down the road to film in a $2.1 million newly constructed townhouse in Newtonville, where she is hoping to court buyers. Her phone was out as she walked through the living room and kitchen. A video from there, too, later ended up on her Instagram.

One post was designed to sell a neighborhood; the other, a house. But Kranenburg’s Instagram account,

REALTOR, Page D2

LANE TURNER/GLOBE STAFF/FILE

Syracuse-based Pyramid Management Group paid $133 million to buy Providence Place mall.

Sale of Providence Place mall finalized after years in limbo

By Steph Machado
GLOBE STAFF

PROVIDENCE — Twenty-seven years to the day after the Providence Place mall opened its doors downtown in 1999, the mall officially has new owners, rescuing it from years of receivership and financial uncertainty.

The new owners, Syracuse-based Pyramid Management Group, one of the original developers of the shopping center, and Paolino Properties, owned by former Providence mayor Joe Paolino Jr., said the transaction closed Wednesday night.

“Never did I think I would ever be standing at a podium, being one of the owners of Providence Place,” said Paolino, who as the state’s economic director in the 1990s flew to Seattle with then-Mayor Buddy Cianci and Governor Bruce Sundlun to persuade Nordstrom, the mall’s first anchor tenant, to come to New England. (Nordstrom left Providence Place in 2019.)

The new owners paid $133 million to buy the mall and declined to disclose the ownership split. The property had been in receivership for nearly two years after the previous owner, Brookfield Properties, defaulted on its debts. The future of the mall was uncertain during that period as wary retailers left and empty storefronts dotted the halls.

Stephen J. Congel, CEO of Pyramid, said he anticipates retailers will be more willing to sign leases now that the mall will “remain fundamentally a retail venue.” Other types of tenants, such as health clubs, comedy clubs, and grocery stores, could be in the mix. The mall already has a movie theater and enter-

MALL, Page D2

TALKING POINTS

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE

NVIDIA NOTIFIES CUSTOMERS IT WILL HIKE SOME PRICES ABOVE 15 PERCENT TO START NEXT YEAR

Some of Nvidia Corp.'s biggest customers have been told that the prices of servers containing its AI chips are going up more than 15 percent in many cases with memory chip costs soaring. The price hikes will go into effect on systems shipped early next year and will impact systems including those with the flagship Vera Rubin and Grace Blackwell chips, according to sources not at liberty to discuss matters publicly. The increases will depend on the generation of Nvidia chips and the memory configurations, they said. Companies who build the servers under contract for large data center operators such as Microsoft Corp., Alphabet Inc.'s Google, and Oracle Corp. have recently notified their customers of the forthcoming increases, the sources said. The inability of the industry's most dominant company to hold the line on prices or absorb growing costs shows how much leverage makers of memory chips — Samsung Electronics Co., SK Hynix Inc., and Micron Technology Inc. — have amid a surge in demand for AI infrastructure. Major technology companies including Apple Inc. and Qualcomm Inc. have recently said they've been forced to charge more for their products because of chip shortages. Nvidia's accelerator processors are the heart of computers that create and run AI software. Their effectiveness depends on how much dynamic random access memory, or DRAM, they are paired with. The two Korean companies and Micron account for most of the world's production of that type of chip.

— BLOOMBERG NEWS

FOOD

BEST COFFEE WILL BE HARDER TO GET AS DOWNPOURS HIT BRAZIL'S TREES

Getting hold of the best arabica coffee beans may be harder for premium roasters and their customers, after crops in Brazil were hit by a wave of heavy downpours. The rains in the world's biggest producer not only delayed harvesting but also compromised quality in key producing regions, tightening the availability of sought-after beans suitable for the best blends sold by Starbucks Corp., Luigi Lavazza SpA, and Illycaffe SpA. Premium arabica coffee has a particularly aromatic and mild taste that requires the right conditions. The showers washed off large amounts of ripe coffee cherries from the trees, leaving the fruits that contain the beans soaking on waterlogged soil and exposed to contamination. That can result in undesirable moldy, musty flavors. "The vast majority of the beans end up developing quality problems, resulting in coffee with a higher degree of fermentation, which significantly affects the beverage," said Simão de Lima, chief executive of the Expocacer cooperative, which represents over 800 growers in the Cerrado Mineiro region of southeastern Brazil. "This has had a significant impact." The setbacks in Brazil are particularly significant for the arabica coffee market because the South American nation produces about 45 percent of the variety.

— BLOOMBERG NEWS

LEGAL

BUC-EE'S CHAIN DRAWS OUTCRY AFTER ANOTHER LAWSUIT OVER LOGO LIKENESS

An alligator, a smiling moose, and a hat-wearing bear are among the many cartoon animals to have found themselves in the crosshairs of Buc-ee's, the popular Texas convenience store chain that has a penchant for protecting its buck-toothed beaver. But now Buc-ee's has set off a Buckeye backlash across Ohio and beyond after taking on a beaver in the city of Beavercreek. It's yet another Buc-ee's Ltd. trademark infringement lawsuit. Supporters of Beaver's Mini Mart have attacked Buc-ee's online and boycotted the stores, and the mini mart's home city passed a resolution making the beaver an official part of its history. British comedian John Oliver has even weighed in on the kerfuffle. On an episode of "Last Week Tonight with John Oliver," the comedian detailed Buc-ee's aggressive history of trademark lawsuits targeting various woodland creatures and launched a website hawking merchandise bearing a knockoff "Buc-off" logo and a squirrel mascot named Mr. Nutterbutter. Buc-ee's sued Beaver's Mini Mart in late July, four months after the chain known for its extensive food offerings and massive restrooms opened its first Ohio store less than a half-hour's drive away. Buc-ee's argues the shop's beaver logo too closely resembles the convenience store giant's branded Buc-ee ("Bucky") beaver. A second Ohio store has been approved to open in 2028. While preparing to enter the state in February, Buc-ee's sued the northern Ohio holding company for Mickey Mart gas stations, arguing its Mickey the Moose logo could be confused with Buc-ee. (The company's response: "A moose is not a beaver.") "I love Buc-ee's, but I don't plan on going back until they start making better business decisions," said Austin Collins, 32, a project manager from Fairborn, Ohio, outside Beaver's, where he was making his first visit to protest the lawsuit. He called targeting a beaver-named business in Beavercreek "a little spiteful." Buc-ee's has defended the lawsuit as protective of its valuable trademark.

— ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKLAND TRUST BANK

Where Each Relationship Matters®

Member FDIC

Housing not on the table for mall plans

► MALL
Continued from Page D1
tainment venues, including Level 99 and Dave & Buster's. He said it was too early to say if Boscov's, one of the mall's major anchors that replaced Nordstrom, would stay. "They were waiting to see if the changes that we hope to implement over the next short period of time impact them," Congel said. "If not, we'll probably be looking to potentially replace them with somebody different." Jim Boscov, the department store's CEO, did not immediately return a phone call seeking comment.

Paolino has been vocal about trying to lure Costco to the mall, but he acknowledged that the wholesale club prefers to have large, one-level stores with big parking lots, which the mall may not be able to accommodate. (There currently are no Costco stores in Rhode Island.) He said a mall Costco would likely be a multi-level store, and would not look the same as a traditional suburban location. "We've had some initial talks," Paolino said. "They didn't throw us out. They didn't sign anything." Paolino said he wants to focus on security enhancements and making the parking garage easier to navigate. He noted many people complain about getting stuck in the garage as they leave events downtown. The two owners emphasized they both run family-owned companies and touted the fact that Paolino's involvement returns the mall to local owners. "Don't get me wrong, we're here for a business purpose," Paolino said, "but you need to invest in your community, invest in your property, and always make it nice." Despite its challenges, the mall has continued to draw millions of visitors a year. Situated between the State House and City Hall, the massive shopping center is next to the Rhode Island Convention Center and Amica Mutual Pavilion, which draws thousands of guests for sporting events and conventions. This summer, thousands converged at the mall's doorstep for the PVD FanZone during the FIFA World Cup. The current occupancy rate was not immediately available, but it sat at about 80 percent leased earlier this year. The Globe counted more than 20 empty storefronts in February, many of which remain empty now, including the old Tiffany & Co. on the first floor. This summer, three empty first-floor storefronts that were once Swarovski Crystal, Banana Republic, and Godiva Chocolates were host to a temporary pop-up market of small local retailers, which is ending later this month. One of the losing bidders for the mall had sought to build housing there, which isn't in the plans for the new owners. Paolino said he has no immediate plans to seek tax breaks from the city when the mall's current 30-year deal expires in 2028, unless the owners have a "dramatic" development proposal that will benefit the city. Currently, instead of paying property taxes, the mall contributes roughly $1 million a year to city coffers.

Under its current assessed value of $730 million, the mall's property tax bill would technically balloon to $21 million when the deal ends. But the property, which sold for less than a fifth of its assessed value, would be reassessed before receiving its first tax bill and would likely pay much less. "A lot of people said to us on day one, 'What kind of tax breaks are you going to ask for?'" Paolino said. "We're not asking for that." "Yet," he added.

Steph Machado can be reached at steph.machado@globe.com. Follow her @StephMachado.

AI tools and social media power savvy, modern realtors

► REALTOR
Continued from Page D1

with nearly 30,000 followers, is in service of a singular goal: To give her an edge, in a saturated real estate market, as the one doing the selling. "You cannot do real estate without marketing yourself," said Kranenburg, 55. "Your goal is to talk to your audience." Kranenburg is one of many real estate agents in Boston and beyond using social media as a new way to reach that audience, in hopes they will become clients. Social media was a top tool for drawing "quality leads" in 2024, according to the National Association of Realtors. That stands in contrast to more traditional alternatives, like online listings, or cold-calling and door knocking. But Kranenburg, who is affiliated with The Real Brokerage, knows that it takes more than a tasteful clip of a fireplace or a kitchen island to get real eyeballs and, ultimately, close deals. That's why she, for one, has veered closer to full-blown influencing, vying for the favor of algorithms by posting hyperlocal content that doesn't necessarily have to do with housing — news about Mike's Pastry, and Sail Boston, and Back Bay elephant sculptures. "No one wakes up thinking they're buying a house from Katherine Kranenburg," she said. "They want to know what is happening in Boston." The idea? Hook users with an aesthetic or an inside scoop, and then reel them in with a walk-through of a $13 million Cambridge six-bedroom. Gain a view, gain a client, gain a sale. "It boils down to: Do you want a realtor that is selling a home first, or themselves first?"

DAVID L. RYAN/GLOBE STAFF

Katherine Kranenburg is one of many realtors who use social media as their top tool to generate leads and sell homes.

said Marc Savatsky of the real estate firm Choose Boston Brokerage. He began posting his listings on Instagram about a decade ago, and cohosts a podcast about real estate. The landscape has become so crowded, he said, that having a unique personality is as important as the strength of the listings. For Kranenburg, this strategy has paid out handsomely. Over the past few years of building her social media presence, with many videos gaining tens of thousands of views, her buyer pool has grown by 80 percent, she said. Buyers regularly flood her direct messages because they, or a friend, saw one of her social media posts. Many of her recent deals, with values in the seven-figures, have been spurred by her posts, she said. Content creation is not something that came naturally to Kranenburg, who lives in Newton. She has worked in real estate for 20 years, eight of them in Boston, but spent most of that time relying on old-fashioned networking and cold-calling for leads. She only started posting to social media regularly in 2023, ramping up slowly, starting with Instagram, then later uploading to YouTube and TikTok. To stay ahead of the curve, Kranenburg has courted help. An editor in the Philippines now produces her YouTube, Instagram, and TikTok content. Her Instagram videos last no longer than a minute, with plenty of fast cuts. "We've got it down to a science," Kranenburg said. "We know what style we're going for."

She also said she often turns to AI tools, such as Claude and ChatGPT, to vacuum the internet for real estate news, fact-check her content, and refine ideas. When she has accidentally posted inaccurate content — such as saying a Cambridge development was actively being built despite it being completed weeks earlier — she has corrected or removed the posts once realizing her mistake. But the high-tech help is still worth it, she said. "If realtors are not incorporating AI into their content, then they're missing the mark," Kranenburg said. "It buys back my time." Kranenburg isn't the only one in the real estate industry reaping the benefits of social media. Ali Joyce, who has been a real estate adviser for nine years, said buyers frequently message her about her seven-second videos that show luxury listings across much of Greater Boston, such as in Westwood, Needham, and Dedham. Savatsky, who works mostly in East Boston, said he sold five units in a multifamily property that is currently under construction off of consistent Instagram posts that showed renderings and the build-out. "Realtors have the opportunity to show people listings that are not normally in their consideration, because they would be filtered out by platforms like Zillow," said Carey Morewedge, a professor of marketing and chair of the marketing department at Boston University's Questrom School of Business. Back in the Newtonville townhouse, Kranenburg's heels clacked through the empty hallways as she walked through each room, moving a dish towel here, pillows there. The beads on her phone's lanyard rattled as she began to capture pictures and videos of gold hardware and a luxe electric range. In the video that ended up on her Instagram, she sits on the kitchen counter as text-box graphics pop up around her, listing off the things she most likes to hear from clients. "I shared your post," one reads. "We found you on social." Redmond Bernhold can be reached at redmond.bernhold@globe.com.

Trump’s new 50% tariffs on Canada target goods from wood to clothing

By Ian Austen
NEW YORK TIMES

OTTAWA — Anoraks and suit jackets. National flags. Some Christmas ornaments. And 36 different kinds of plywood.

The lists of hundreds of goods from Canada subject to new 50 percent tariffs from the United States are long and seemingly organized at random.

The Trump administration imposed the tariffs, which took effect Saturday, after Canadian Prime Minister Mark Carney called off trade negotiations with the United States that had lasted nearly a month. “They asked too much and offered too little,” Carney said.

Carney has promised to retaliate “dollar for dollar” against the new tariffs, which join previous tariffs of up to 50 percent that President Trump put on Canadian aluminum, steel and autos last year. Lumber has tariffs that predate Trump’s return to office; he nevertheless increased them last year.

Here are some of the goods that are subject to the new tariffs:

For Canadian companies that depend on US business, the new tariffs are likely to be a source of great anxiety. For customs brokers and trade lawyers who guide those companies, they are an extraordinary business opportunity.

But for the lay reader, the tariffs are sometimes baffling. The items affected, according to the Trump administration, cover $20 billion in Canadian exports. They are laid out in three lists.

Some clear patterns emerge from the text. Canada’s forest industry, which has been enmeshed in a seemingly endless battle with the United States for decades, has been particularly targeted. On the lists, the many wood products include

AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

Canadian Prime Minister Mark Carney (right) said he will retaliate “dollar for dollar” with President Trump’s new tariffs.

36 different kinds of plywood alone. Homebuilders in the United States have already said there is not enough US product to replace Canadian plywood, so the tariffs could increase housing construction costs.

Alcohol is also prominent. The Trump administration has been particularly vexed by the fact that eight of Canada’s 10 provinces still restrict US wine and spirits from their government-owned liquor distribution system and stores. Those measures began after Trump suggested making Canada the 51st state and imposed tariffs in violation of the free trade agreement between the two countries and Mexico.

Some of the drinks now effectively shut out from the United States by tariffs hold little obvious appeal, including “mixtures of or with a basis of odoriferous substances with 20 to 50 percent alcohol by weight requiring only the addition of ethyl alcohol or water to be a beverage.” Left unexplained is why anyone would add more alcohol to something that is already half composed of the intoxicant.

Dairy products are another target. Canada uses production quotas and other tools to protect domestic dairy producers, who sell largely to the Canadian market, potentially limiting the effect of the new US duties.

Clothing and textiles also take a hit. Like the United States, much of Canada’s clothing production moved overseas long ago, and some Canadian online retailers sell goods made abroad to US customers. That, however, will not give them an out. Simply shipping things from Canada triggers the tariffs, regardless of where the products were made.

Few items of clothing escaped the tariffs. They include overcoats, anoraks, windbreakers, sleeveless jackets, cotton sweaters, T-shirts, car coats, capes, cloaks, track suits, suit jackets, blazers, and dresses. Gloves, mittens, and mitts are on the list unless they are related to sports.

Also included are national flags, canvas used for painting stage backdrops, tarpaulins, awnings, and sun blinds.

Not every item on the list comes from large companies. Several products, including jewelry and honey, come from small, even one-person, operations.

The item descriptions range from the broad to the almost peculiarly specific. Among the latter is wood furniture “of a kind used in the bedroom and not designed for motor vehicle use.”

The tariff list has a bit of a spoilsport bent by including “articles for Christmas festivities, ornaments, not of glass or wood,” toys, including riding ones but not bikes, fishing rods, hockey sticks, skates and “festive, carnival, or other entertainment articles.” Dog owners will see similar increases in the price of leashes, collars, muzzles, and harnesses.

Above all, the list reveals intriguing, hidden sides of Canadian industry, including companies that produce or sell bookbinding machines, egg-grading equipment, marine buoys, derricks, sand and steam blasters, stills (“not for domestic purposes”), safes, and “base metal statuettes.”

Study found explicit bias against female physicians

►THE BIG IDEA
Continued from Page D1

listened to.

Both peers and mentors advised her to get a man to raise important issues in the hospital. Being a health care leader who lacks authority is “a terrible position to be in because you’re responsible for people’s lives,” said Temkin.

Temkin emphasizes that it’s not just men who view men as natural leaders. She has witnessed women bullying other women, but she said talking about it can be “taboo.”

Dr. Clara Keegan, a family doctor and associate professor at the University of Vermont’s Larner College of Medicine, notes that more women than men are becoming doctors. But “there is definitely a gap both in compensation and in positions in academic leadership,” she said. “As you move up the leadership, the percentage that are women becomes smaller and smaller.”

Keegan notes that “on chair searches that I’ve been on, one of the things on the rubric that we’re supposed to evaluate people on is their ‘chair presence,’ and I think that that is the sort of place where a bias can come in.”

In part, that’s because men are often viewed as better — or more natural — leaders. A 2019 study by researchers at Washington University found that “health care professionals and surgeons hold implicit and explicit biases associating men with careers and surgery, and women with family and family medicine.”

Many female physicians believe they are targeted for the sort of assertiveness that would be admired in a man — or at least tolerated. Dr. Pringi Miller, founder of the advocacy group Physician Just Equity, which provides peer support to physicians, frequently works with doctors, particularly women, who fear for their livelihoods because of sham peer reviews.

Doctors from across the country turn to Miller’s organization, and the mistreatment that Miller sees takes a variety of forms, she said, including “bullying, harassment, discrimination, retaliation. And it’s pervasive.”

There are other issues. Temkin believes that “sexual harassment is ubiquitous,” and, for women on the path to leadership, “it’s another way that women have their confidence undermined. Or it can force women to change jobs.”

When Temkin herself was sexually harassed by an operating room technician who leered and made inappropriate comments, she said she wasn’t sure what to do. “You don’t know if you should report it or not, because you don’t know if it’s going to affect patient care. You don’t know if it’s going to affect your own career.”

As women gain more power, Temkin believes that the nature of the discrimination they experience changes. “The sexual harassment and some of the little digs may be worse while women are younger,” she said. “But as women gain expertise and rise into leadership positions, they’re much more likely to experience frank discrimination, which limits their ability to be successful in their leadership position.”

Many women end up quitting, resulting in enormous losses for patients, said Miller. She notes that female doctors often have superior results — a 2023 JAMA article found that patients of female surgeons were less likely to die, be readmitted, or have major complications after surgery. She argues that it hurts medical outcomes when women are pushed out or leave because of mistreatment.

In 2015, one physician — who asked that some identifying details remain anonymous because of potential repercussions — was the chief of anesthesiology at a community hospital in Massachusetts. She had held the position for about seven years, until her boss approached her one day.

“The administration doesn’t like your facial expression,” she remembers him saying. “You’re going to have to step down.”

She was shocked. She believed that a man would never have been talked to that way. Before she immigrated to the United States from Europe, the physician said, “I had this vision of America, or the thought of America, that it’s amazing and everything is fair.” But being a woman in medical leadership proved more complicated than she had anticipated.

“There are more women going into medicine than men for the first time in history,” noted the anesthesiologist. “So if you discourage or mistreat the women physicians, they’re going to give up, they’re going to go part-time, they’re going to retire early, and then society loses.”

It’s important for the health care system to take this issue seriously.

In 1970, when fewer than 8 percent of doctors were women, losing a substantial number of them didn’t significantly alter the workforce. But now, Temkin said, “if women make up 50 percent of the physician workforce, and we’re forcing out 20 percent of them because of these issues related to culture and the way that we treat women, then that becomes a real systems problem.”

It is the increase in the number of female doctors that makes the bullying and harassment of women in medicine particularly concerning, with ramifications for the environment within hospitals, the quality of care administered, and the doctors available to administer it.

Fixing the problem will require attention from leaders in academic medicine, professional organizations, hospitals, and government. It’s a problem that will not solve itself, and that should not depend on women risking their careers to tell their stories.

Kara Miller is the host of the podcast It Turns Out. Send comments to kara.miller@globe.com.

boston.com/classifieds

LEGAL NOTICES

BOSTON HOUSING AUTHORITY Request For Proposals

Boston Housing Accelerator Fund Construction Lending and Investment Opportunities BHA Job No.: 2463-01

The Boston Housing Authority (BHA) is furthering our mission to build and support healthy, sustainable communities by embarking on a new effort to spur housing production through publicly backed social lending and investment. The Housing Accelerator Fund, a project in collaboration with the City of Boston, was established to invest in the creation of mixed-income housing. The Fund supports three distinct types of projects: mixed-income rental projects (privately owned), mixed-income rental projects (publicly owned), and mixed-income homeownership projects. In order to unlock construction, the BHA will make available various products to facilitate reduced borrowing costs for construction and development firms.

The Boston Housing Authority (BHA) is currently seeking proposals from firms seeking construction loans or investments by the BHA. The BHA anticipates making available up to $35M for this purpose in its initial offering at competitive rates. The BHA reserves the right to negotiate loan or investment amount, rate, term or duration for compelling projects and to roll construction lending and investment into a permanent loan or investment product.

Inquiries Deadline: Inquiries or requests for modification to any provision of this RFP must be submitted by 2:00 PM on August 31, 2026 (the “Inquiry Deadline”) via email to bids@bostonhousing.org.

Proposal Deadline: Proposers responding to this RFP shall submit one (1) original and four (4) copies of their proposal no later than 2:00 PM on Thursday, September 24, 2026 (the “Proposal Deadline”) by mail or hand delivery to: Director of Procurement, Boston Housing Authority, 52 Chauncy Street, 6th floor, Boston, MA 02111

Each proposal shall be in a sealed envelope marked with the Proposer’s name, address, and telephone number. In addition to the five hard copies of the proposal, Proposers shall provide one (1) electronic copy of their proposal on USB media. This submission should be in Adobe PDF format. Proposers shall submit the fee and non-fee portions of their proposal under separate cover as follows:

1. One envelope shall be marked “BHA Job No 2463-01 Technical Proposal for Accelerator Fund Construction Lending” and shall be sealed and marked with the BHA Job No 2463-01 Fee Proposal for Accelerator Fund Construction Lending”

Details and requirements are described in the RFP. To obtain a copy of the RFP, please go to <https://www.bostonhousing.org/en/Bid-Opportunities/Current-Bid-Opportunities.aspx>

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
LAND COURT
DEPARTMENT OF THE TRIAL COURT
DOCKET NUMBER 26CM001687
ORDER OF NOTICE

TO: Joseph Curran St Denis

and to all persons entitled to the benefit of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C. c. 50 §3901 (et seq):

Movement Mortgage, LLC

claiming to have an interest in a Mortgage covering real property in Blackstone, numbered 75 Main Street, given by Joseph Curran St Denis to Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc., as mortgagee, as nominee for Movement Mortgage, LLC, its successors and assigns, dated April 29, 2025, and recorded in Worcester County (Worcester District) Registry of Deeds in Book 71914, Page 204, and now held by the Plaintiff by assignment, has/have filed with this court a complaint for determination of Defendant/s/Defendants’ Servicemembers status.

If you now are, or recently have been, in the active military service of the United States of America, then you may be entitled to the benefits of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act. If you object to a foreclosure of the above-mentioned property on that basis, then you or your attorney must file a written appearance and answer in this court at Three Pemberton Square, Boston, MA 02108 on or before 10/05/2026 or you may lose the opportunity to challenge the foreclosure on the ground of noncompliance with the Act.

Witness, GORDON H. PIPER Chief Justice of this Court on 8/18/2026.
Attest: Deborah J. Patterson, Recorder

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
LAND COURT
DEPARTMENT OF THE TRIAL COURT
DOCKET NUMBER 26CM001687
ORDER OF NOTICE

TO: EB Waite, LLC

and to all persons entitled to the benefit of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C. c. 50 §3901 (et seq)

Citizens Bank, N.A.

claiming to have an interest in a Mortgage covering real property in 6C Doris Rd, Bedford, MA 01730, given by William H. Waite, Jr. and Ethel M. Waite to Citizens Bank, N.A. dated July 20, 2017 and recorded in the Middlesex County Registry of Deeds in Book 14729, Page 124, and now held by the Plaintiff by assignment, has/have filed with this court a complaint for determination of Defendant/s/Defendants’ Servicemembers status.

If you now are, or recently have been, in the active military service of the United States of America, then you may be entitled to the benefits of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act. If you object to a foreclosure of the above-mentioned property on that basis, then you or your attorney must file a written appearance and answer in this court at Three Pemberton Square, Boston, MA 02108, on or before 10/05/2026 or you may lose the opportunity to challenge the foreclosure on the ground of noncompliance with the Act.

Witness, Gordon H. Piper, Chief Justice of this Court on 8/18/2026.

Attest: Deborah J. Patterson, Recorder

SUMMONS (CITATION JUDICIAL)

NOTICE TO DEFENDANT:

LISA SCHWARZBERG, an Individual; and, LISA SCHWARZBERG, Trustee of the LEVY FAMILY TRUST dated 10-15-99, and, DOES 1-3
YOU ARE BEING SUED BY PLAINTIFF:
AUDIA MASCAPI, an individual; and, CAMERON HOLL, an individual

NOTICE! You have been sued. The court may decide against you without your being heard unless you respond within 30 days. Read the information below. You have 30 CALENDAR DAYS after this summons and legal papers are served on you to file a written response at this court and have a copy served on the plaintiff. A letter or phone call will not protect you. Your written response must be in proper legal form. If you want the court to hear your case. There may be a court form that you can use for your response. You can find these court forms and more information at the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), your county law library, or the courthouse nearest you. If you cannot pay the filing fee, ask the court clerk for a fee waiver form. If you do not file your response on time, the court may decide by default, and your wages, money, and property may be taken without further warning from the court.

There are other legal requirements. You may want to call an attorney right away. If you do not know an attorney, you may want to call an attorney referral service. If you cannot afford an attorney, you may be eligible for free legal services from a nonprofit legal services program. You can locate these nonprofit groups at the California Legal Services Web site (www.lawhelpcalifornia.org), the California Courts Online Self-Help Center (www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp), or by contacting your local court or county bar association.

NOTE: The court has a statutory lien for waived fees and costs on any settlement or arbitration award of $10,000 or more in a civil case. The court’s lien must be paid before the court will dismiss the case.

The name and address of the court is: San Diego Superior Court 330 West Broadway, San Diego, CA 92101

CASE NUMBER: 26CU028448C

The name, address, and telephone number of plaintiffs attorney, or plaintiff without an attorney, is:
Daniel E. Forde, Stefan Lee Ser, Hoffman I Forde A.P.C., 3033 Fifth Avenue, Suite 400, San Diego, CA 92103, 619-546-7880

Date: May 27, 2026
Clerk, By M. Sepulveda, Deputy

City Of Boston Public Improvement Commission
August 20, 2026

Ordered: That due notice be given that this Commission is of the opinion that in said City of Boston the following public improvements will be considered at the request of the petitioners: the City of Boston Transportation Department and the City of Boston Public Works Department.

On a joint petition by the petitioners for the making of Specific Repairs within Dorchester Avenue(public way), Dorchester, located at its intersection with Dewar Street/ Greenmount Street.

This Commission appoints September 3, 2026, at 10:00 AM, in Boston City Hall room 801, as the time and place for the Public Hearing to consider the petition of the petitioners. Contact PIC@boston.gov with any comments, questions, or to request a link to join the hearing virtually.

NICHOLAS GOVE
EAMON SHELTON
AMY CORDING
TANIA DEL RIO
HENRY VITALE
KRISTEN MCCOSH
PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

A true copy of an order passed by said Commission on said day.

Attest:
Ashley A. Biggins
Acting Executive Secretary

City Of Boston Public Improvement Commission
August 20, 2026

Ordered: That due notice be given that this Commission is of the opinion that in said City of Boston the following public improvements will be considered at the request of the petitioner: the City of Boston Parks & Recreation Department.

On a petition by the petitioner for the making of Specific Repairs within the following public ways in Dorchester:

•Norwell Street – generally at address nos. 217-231, north of Park Street.
•Park Street – generally west of Norwell Street.

This Commission appoints September 3, 2026, at 10:00 AM, in Boston City Hall room 801, as the time and place for the Public Hearing to consider the petition of the petitioner. Contact PIC@boston.gov with any comments, questions, or to request a link to join the hearing virtually.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

NICHOLAS GOVE
EAMON SHELTON
AMY CORDING
TANIA DEL RIO
HENRY VITALE
KRISTEN MCCOSH

A true copy of an order passed by said Commission on said day.

Attest:
Ashley A. Biggins
Acting Executive Secretary

LEGAL NOTICES

City Of Boston Public Improvement Commission
August 20, 2026

Ordered: That due notice be given that this Commission is of the opinion that in said City of Boston the following public improvements will be considered at the request of the petitioners: the City of Boston Parks & Recreation Department and the City of Boston Public Works Department.

On a joint petition by the petitioners for the Widening & Relocation of the existing right-of-way lines of Park Street (public way), Dorchester, as well as for the acceptance of a Highway Easement, located on its northerly side generally west of Norwell Street.

This Commission appoints September 3, 2026, at 10:00 AM, in Boston City Hall room 801, as the time and place for the Public Hearing to consider the petition of the petitioner. Contact PIC@boston.gov with any comments, questions, or to request a link to join the hearing virtually.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

NICHOLAS GOVE
EAMON SHELTON
AMY CORDING
TANIA DEL RIO
HENRY VITALE
KRISTEN MCCOSH

A true copy of an order passed by said Commission on said day.

Attest:
Ashley A. Biggins
Acting Executive Secretary

City Of Boston Public Improvement Commission
August 20, 2026

Ordered: That due notice be given that this Commission is of the opinion that in said City of Boston the following public improvements will be considered at the request of the petitioner: Lightpath Fiber Infrastructure LLC.

On a petition by the petitioner for the Rental of City Shadow to install new telecommunication fiber in existing conduit within the following public ways in Boston Proper:

•Anthony “Rip” Valenti Way – between Portland Street and Merrimac Street; •Merrimac Street – at Valenti Way.

This Commission appoints September 3, 2026, at 10:00 AM, in Boston City Hall room 801, as the time and place for the Public Hearing to consider the petition of the petitioner. Contact PIC@boston.gov with any comments, questions, or to request a link to join the hearing virtually.

NICHOLAS GOVE
EAMON SHELTON
AMY CORDING
TANIA DEL RIO
HENRY VITALE
KRISTEN MCCOSH
PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

A true copy of an order passed by said Commission on said day.

Attest:
Ashley A. Biggins
Acting Executive Secretary

ORDER OF NOTICE BY PUBLICATION
DOCKET NUMBER: 26B3CV00780
Massachusetts Trial Court
The Superior Court
Plymouth County Clerk of Courts
CASE NAME:
MidFirst Bank
v.
Samantha Waterman
Thomas R. Waterman
Thomas R. Waterman, as Trustee of the Waterman Realty Trust u/d/t dated April 2, 2009

TO: Samantha Waterman, Thomas R. Waterman, Thomas R. Waterman, as Trustee of the Waterman Realty Trust u/d/t dated April 2, 2009, all in said Commonwealth, and to all persons entitled to the benefit of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, 50 U.S.C. c. 50 §3901 (et seq.).

MidFirst Bank

claiming to have an interest in a Mortgage covering real property in West Wareham, numbered 41 Piercerville Road, given by Samantha Waterman and Thomas R. Waterman to Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc., as mortgagee, as nominee for HomeBridge Financial Services, Inc., as successors and assigns, dated September 25, 2019, and recorded in Plymouth County Registry of Deeds in Book 51747, Page 124, and now held by the Plaintiff by assignment, has/have filed with this court a complaint for foreclosure said mortgage by entry and exercise of the power of sale.

If you now are, or recently have been, in the active military service of the United States of America, then you may be entitled to the benefits of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act. If you object to a foreclosure of the above-mentioned property, then you or your attorney must file a written appearance and answer in this court at Plymouth Superior Court, 52 Obery Street, Plymouth, MA 02360 on or before October 5, 2026 or you may lose the opportunity to challenge the foreclosure on the ground of noncompliance with the Act.

Witness, MICHAEL D. RICCIUTI, Chief Justice of this Court, at Plymouth, Massachusetts, this 17th day of August, 2026.
Attest: Robert S. Creedon, Jr, Clerk of Court

City Of Boston Public Improvement Commission
August 20, 2026

Ordered: That due notice be given that this Commission is of the opinion that in said City of Boston the following public improvements will be considered at the request of the petitioner: Starboard Institute Inc.

On a petition by the petitioner for the making of Specific Repairs within Central Square(public way), East Boston, located generally at Liverpool Street/Meridian Street.

This Commission appoints September 3, 2026, at 10:00 AM, in Boston City Hall room 801, as the time and place for the Public Hearing to consider the petition of the petitioner. Contact PIC@boston.gov with any comments, questions, or to request a link to join the hearing virtually.

NICHOLAS GOVE
EAMON SHELTON
AMY CORDING
TANIA DEL RIO
HENRY VITALE
KRISTEN MCCOSH
PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

A true copy of an order passed by said Commission on said day.

Attest:
Ashley A. Biggins
Acting Executive Secretary

LEGAL NOTICES

RFP for Architectural Services
TheNewtonHousingAuthority (NHA) is seeking proposals for architectural services for the redevelopment of Parker House, a 33-unit public housing development in Newton Centre. The NHA would like to develop the site to better suit the needs of the current residents and increase the number of affordable housing units on site.

The Request for Proposals is available upon request by email to Hannah Cross at hcross@newtonhousing.org. Proposals are due by September 24, 2026 at 5:00 pm.

Access your Globe subscription account online.

Here’s what you can do:

- » Report a missing paper
- » Put your delivery on hold while on vacation
- » Edit your account information
- » Update delivery instructions
- » Choose payment plans

You can also take advantage of GlobeReader to have the news delivered straight to your desktop.

Access your Globe account online: bostonglobe.com/subscriber

The Boston Globe

Wake up with The Boston Globe app

Powerful journalism on tap.

The Boston Globe app provides you with the best way to experience our award-winning journalism. Read, watch, and comment on the latest news, investigative reports, and thought-provoking opinions and analysis in the Globe app.

Start your day off informed—download the app.

The Boston Globe

UNIVERSAL CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ROCK 'N' ROLL KIDS BY NGUHI ROSS AND ERIK AGARD | EDITED BY AIDAN DESHONG

- ACROSS
- Nutrient in bread, briefly
 - Hose down, e.g.
 - Unit of garlic
 - Cricket match segments
 - Notion
 - October birthstone
 - Queenly
 - Capital of China's Henan province (In this answer, note letters 3-6)
 - Tobago's island neighbor
 - Surname aptly found in "poetry"
 - That, in Tijuana
 - ___ for the course
 - Tapioca source
 - Landscapes at some monasteries (... letters 1-4)
 - Actor Kilmer
 - Sports org. with grand slams?
 - Plentiful
 - La ___ Tar Pits
 - Top-left PC key
 - Some skin care products
 - "As I was saying ..."
 - 19-Down guess
 - Fighting word?
 - Shavings in marmalade (... letters 4-7)
 - "The Princess Diaries" star Julie
 - Alley-___
 - Unused
 - Munch on

- Sightseeing in Kenya, perhaps
- Millennial pause's youthful counterpart, or each group of indicated letters?
- U.S. ten-der?
- Shallowest Great Lake
- "Jane ___"
- Fragrance
- Blockades in rivers
- Do some English homework
- "Sigh ..."

- DOWN
- The "C" of AOC
 - Risk-___
 - Zone
 - Fibrous muffin ingredient
 - D.C. hooper
 - Reason for extra time on a test: Abbr.
 - "I told you so!"
 - Flying Solo
 - Clowns
 - Major unrest
 - Southeast Asian language
 - ___-ray Disc
 - Exit quietly
 - Wayfinding tech
 - Challenge that might involve two dogs?
 - "Fast Money" network
 - Sun Devils' sch.
 - Certain shoes or vehicles
 - Secondary Insta account
 - Spider-___ (Marvel hero)
 - Light course
 - Spots for jottings

- Cameron of "Charlie's Angels"
- Blessing
- Untreated indigo fabric
- Places for AirPods
- Place for a chemical peel
- "Holy moly!"
- They may inflate when stroked
- "I can do without"
- Dutch oven coating
- Williams who danced at the Super Bowl
- half-time show
- Certain protective hairstyle
- Bulldozes
- Aliens, briefly
- Fried ___ (Southern side dish)
- Payroll tax acronym
- HS diploma alternative
- Unit of history
- "I can't forget my history is ___ story" (Beyonce)
- Yes vote

JUMBLE CROSSWORDS™

by David L. Hoyt 8-24-26

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
13			14	15				16
17				18			19
20				21			22
23			24			25	26			27	28
29			30			31			32
			33			34		35	36
	37	38				39		40
41				42			43
44				45		46		47	48	49
50			51	52		53			54
		55				56			57
58	59			60	61			62
63				64				65
66				67				68

CLUE

- Concealed
- Registered ___
- Declare invalid
- Swiped

ANSWER

EDHND
RNSEU
LNNUA
NTELSO

CLUE

- Manage, control
- Inactive
- Everlasting
- Legendary wizard

ANSWER

HNEDLA
RMDTNOA
LRTNEAE
NLRMIE

BONUS

Complete the crossword puzzle by looking at the clues and unscrambling the answers. When the puzzle is complete, unscramble the circled letters to solve the BONUS.

How to play

Send comments to DLHoyt@HoytInteractiveMedia.com

Boston's forecast

TODAY

6 A.M. NOON 6 P.M.

HIGH 81-86

LOW 62-67

Sunny to partly cloudy, warmer and less humid. Winds SSW 8-16 mph. Partly cloudy tonight. Winds SW 7-14 mph.

TUESDAY

6 A.M. NOON 6 P.M.

HIGH 77-82

LOW 62-67

Mostly sunny and pleasant. Winds WSW 8-16 mph. Clear to partly cloudy at night. Winds W 7-14 mph.

WEDNESDAY

6 A.M. NOON 6 P.M.

HIGH 80-85

LOW 63-68

Mostly sunny. Winds W 6-12 mph. Partly cloudy at night. Winds SW 4-8 mph.

THURSDAY

6 A.M. NOON 6 P.M.

HIGH 80-85

LOW 64-69

Variable cloudiness with a passing shower or two. Winds S 7-14 mph. Partly cloudy and humid at night. Winds S 7-14 mph.

FRIDAY

6 A.M. NOON 6 P.M.

HIGH 77-82

LOW 65-70

A shower followed by rain and a thunderstorm in the afternoon. Winds S 7-14 mph. Partly cloudy and humid at night. Winds W 4-8 mph.

Proven Superior Accuracy™

Visit AccuWeather.com

AccuWeather.

New England

<0 0s 10s 20s 30s 40s 50s 60s 70s 80s 90s 100+

TODAY:

A few showers possible in the western and north-ern areas; otherwise, clouds and sun. Turning warmer and less humid.

TOMORROW:

Times of clouds and sun. There could be a few showers in the western and north-ern areas in the afternoon.

EXTENDED:

Mostly sunny and pleas-ant with a few showers to the north Wednesday. Partly sunny with showers in the afternoon.

Forecasts and graphics provided by AccuWeather, Inc. ©2026

Temperatures are today's highs and tonight's lows.

Almanac

Yesterday's high/low

70°/65°

Sunrise today

6:01 a.m.

Sunset today

7:32 p.m.

Moonrise today

5:56 p.m.

Mount Washington (5 p.m. yesterday)

Weather

Dense fog

Visibility

1/16 miles

Wind

south at 24 m.p.h.

High/low temperature

52/48

Snow depth at 5 p.m.

0.0"

24 Hr. Precipitation

(valid at 5 p.m. yesterday)

Yesterday

0.38"

Month to date

0.98"

Year to date

17.59"

Precip days in August

9

Norm. month to date

2.45"

Norm. year to date

27.26"

Climate data are compiled from National Weather Service records and are subject to change or correction.

Tides

A.M.

P.M.

Boston high

9:32

9:38

Height

8.1

9.5

Boston low

3:17

3:19

Height

1.5

2.1

High tides

Old Orchard ME

9:27

9:33

Hampton Beach NH

9:41

9:47

Plum Island

9:35

9:49

Ipswich

9:18

9:23

High tides

Gloucester

9:35

9:43

Marblehead

9:32

9:38

Lynn

9:36

9:39

Scituate

9:35

9:45

Plymouth

9:32

9:45

Cape Cod Canal East

9:21

9:29

Cape Cod Canal West

8:17

8:22

Falmouth

9:16

9:22

Small craft advisory

Gale warning

Storm warning

Wind

Seas

Temp

New England marine forecast

Boston Harbor

SW 7-14 kts.

1-3 ft.

82/65

East Cape

SW 8-16 kts.

1-3 ft.

82/64

Cod Canal

SW 8-16 kts.

1-3 ft.

81/64

Buzzards Bay

SW 8-16 kts.

1-3 ft.

81/64

For current Charles River Basin water quality, call (781) 788-0007 or go to <http://www.charlesriver.org>.

Cities	Forecast high and low temperatures and conditions
● Travel delays possible, ● C Clouds, ● F Fog, ● H Haze, ● I Ice, ● Pc Partly Cloudy, ● R Rain, ● Sh Showers, ● S Sun, ● Sn Snow, ● Fl Flurries, ● T Thunderstorms, ● W Windy
Today	Tomorrow	Today	Tomorrow	Today	Tomorrow	Today	Tomorrow
Atlanta 91/68 Pc	91/71 Pc	Los Angeles 96/72 S	95/74 S	Seattle 79/58 Pc	85/57 Pc	Jerusalem 89/68 S	90/70 S
Atlantic City 83/58 S	84/60 S	● Miami 93/80 T	93/80 T	Washington 84/64 S	85/66 S	London 73/60 Pc	75/62 C
Charlotte 89/64 S	88/68 Pc	● New Orleans 96/78 T	90/77 T	Beijing 91/74 T	89/75 T	● Moscow 66/54 Sh	61/54 Sh
Chicago 78/59 Pc	80/64 Pc	New York City 79/64 S	78/65 S	Cancun 94/76 S	94/76 S	Paris 81/61 Pc	78/65 R
● Dallas 107/83 Pc	105/81 Pc	Philadelphia 82/64 S	82/67 S	● Mexico City 67/57 R	72/58 R	Rome 91/76 S	88/70 T
● Denver 91/63 T	88/59 T	● Phoenix 109/89 T	114/90 S	● Montreal 71/60 T	72/60 Sh	● San Juan 92/80 R	92/80 R
Detroit 77/58 S	78/59 Pc	● Salt Lake City 92/69 T	95/70 S	● Toronto 68/59 Sh	74/59 S	Stockholm 67/45 Pc	68/45 Pc
● Fort Myers 93/76 T	95/76 T	San Francisco 72/58 Pc	73/58 Pc	Vancouver 74/59 Pc	78/60 Pc	Tokyo 91/80 Pc	93/81 S

HOROSCOPES

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, Aug. 24, 2026: You have an intel-ctual desire to understand ev-erything. You are original, obser-vant, and artistically creative. The theme for this year is service to others, perhaps to family. Therefore, take care of yourself so that you will be able to help those who turn to you for guidance, comfort, and courage.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Please know there's a Moon Alert all day today. Meanwhile, you're high-viz. People notice you more than usual. You might have im-portant discussions with bosses, parents, VIPs, or the police. If so, agree to nothing important. Don't volunteer for anything today. Stay chill. Tonight: You're admired. TAURUS (April 20-May 20) This is a playful, creative day! Artists can make art and explore new ideas because this entire day is a Moon Alert, which means your mind is wide open, floating like a helium balloon let loose in the sky. Jot down your ideas. To-night: Explore! GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be extra careful today because this entire day is a Moon Alert, which means restrict your spend-ing to food and gas. Postpone im-portant decisions. Meanwhile, this Moon Alert is taking place in one of your Money Houses, which means you'll be tempted to do some financial wheeling and dealing. Tonight: Check your fi-nances. CANCER (June 21-July 22) Today has its challenges. There's a Moon Alert taking place oppo-site your sign. Don't agree to any-thing important. Restrict spend-ing to food and gas. Get physical exercise. Do something to blow off pent-up steam that might be building up within you. Tonight: Listen and cooperate. LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be careful. Today the Sun and Mercury are both in your Money House; however, there's a Moon Alert all day, which is unusual. Restrict spending to food and gas. Avoid important decisions. Expect shortages at work. Fortu-nately, your communications with others are charming. To-night: Work. VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) This is a powerful time for you because the Sun is in your sign, and tomorrow your ruler Mercury moves into your sign as well. In the meantime, all day today is a Moon Alert, which will height-en your creative juices. Explore the arts. Enjoy socializing. Re-strict spending to food and gas. Tonight: Have fun! LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) This is the perfect day to schmooze and do as little as pos-sible. Enjoy the company of oth-ers. This entire day is a Moon Alert, which certainly discourag-es spending. (Except for food and gas.) Relax with friends or cocoon at home. Tonight: Relax at home. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) There is a Moon Alert in effect all day today, and it might impact your movements, your conversa-tions, and your transportation patterns. Delays and shortages are classic. Meanwhile, restrict your spending to food and gas. This is a great day to socialize. Wait until tomorrow to act. To-night: Discussions. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Be careful because there's a Moon Alert in effect all day today and it's taking place in your primary Money House. Therefore, do not make financial decisions. Don't spend money for anything other than food and gas. On the other hand, it's a great day to socialize and explore creative projects. To-night: Check your money. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Today there is a Moon Alert in your sign all day! You might feel vaguely hesitant. There might be a dreamy quality present. Howev-er, a Moon Alert is a wonderful time to be creative and socialize with others, even though it's a poor time to spend money or make important decisions. To-night: Stay grounded. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Your best approach to this day is to be low-key or to work alone or behind the scenes. Because a Moon Alert is in effect all day, re-strict your spending to food and gas. Postpone important deci-sions. Work hard and carry on as usual. Tonight: Privacy. PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) This is a lovely day to schmooze with friends and members of groups; however, don't agree to anything important because there is a Moon Alert in effect all day. Don't volunteer for anything. Explore the arts and enjoy good times. Tonight: Friendships.

© 2026 King Features Syndicate Inc.

SUDOKU

8		3					1	6
			4				2
	6		2				7	3
			8		2		3
9		1						2
	1		5		3
2	5			1		4
	8			5
6	7				1			5

Fill in the grid so that every row, every column, and every 3X3 box contains the digits 1 through 9. Puzzle difficulty lev-els: Easy on Monday and Tuesday, more difficult on Wednesday and Thursday, most difficult on Friday and Saturday. Tips and computer program at www.sudoku.com.

DAILY BRIDGE CLUB

BY FRANK STEWART

South dealer — N-S vulnerable

North

♠ A K J 8 6 3 2

♥ A J 6 4

♦ Q 6

♣ None

East

♠ Q 10 9 5 4

♥ 7

♦ K J 9

♣ A J 8 4

South

♠ None

♥ K Q 10 9 5 3

♦ A 7 4 2

♣ Q 7 5

South

1 ♥

3 ♥

West

Pass

Pass

North

2 ♠

6 ♥

East

Pass

All Pass

Opening lead — ♥ 2

“Which of these statements,” Cy the Cynic asked me, “would you least want to hear from your partner when you table dummy?”

- ‘You bid too much.’
- ‘You didn’t bid enough.’
- ‘Where’s the hand you held during the auction?’
- ‘This will only take a minute.’”

“The last one,” I said. “Once the auction is over, partner needs to focus on the play.”

Cy had been today’s North.

“When I put down the dummy,” he told me, “partner roast-ed me for timidity; he said I should have bid a grand slam. Meanwhile, he drew trumps and took the A-K of spades. When West discarded, partner lacked the entries to set up and cash the long spades. He took six trumps, two high spades, two ruffs in dummy and a diamond. Down one at six hearts.”

South must win the trump lead in dummy, ruff a spade and lead a trump to dummy. Then he has enough entries to estab-lish the long spades for 13 tricks.

DAILY QUESTION You hold: ♠ Q 10 9 5 4 ♥ 7 ♦ K J 9 ♣ A J 8 4. Your partner opens one heart, you bid one spade, he rebids two hearts and you try 2NT. Partner then bids three clubs. What do you say?

ANSWER: Partner shows six hearts, four clubs and minimum strength. If he held a stronger 6-4 hand, his second bid would have been three hearts or, if the quality of his heart suit did not merit a jump, two clubs. Pass. To persist to 3NT would show the same values twice.

ZIPPY “Child’s Portion” by Bill Griffith

BIZARRO by Wayno & Piraro

MOTHER GOOSE & GRIMM by Mike Peters

ADAM@HOME by Rob Harrell

ROSE IS ROSE by Pat Brady & Don Wimmer

Today's Crossword Solution

S	V	T	V		D	V	E	R		S	M	V	D
L	N	E	C	S		E	R	A	E		S	I	R	E
S	E	W	I	D		E	K	V	H	S	Z	N	E	G
I	R	V	F	V	S	N	O		L	V	E
M	E	N		D	O	O		S	M	E	R	D	N	V
L	S	E	Z	E	N	V	R	O			M	O	P
			V	L	E		A	V	M	A	N	V	O	S
	S	T	I	O		C	S	E		V	E	R	B
L	N	V	D	N	B	V		E	M
T	V	A		S	N	E	D	R	V		G	N	E	Z
V	A	V	S	S	V	C		R	V	D		O	S	E
	E	O	D		D	V	D	I	N	I	R	L
N	O	H	Z	E	N	E	H	Z		T	V	E	R
T	V	D	O		V	E	D	I		S	R	E	A	O
B	L	B		H	S	V	M			B	A	R	V	C

Today's Sudoku Solution

5	8	1	6	2	3	4	7	9
6	9	2	5	4	7	1	8	3
7	4	3	1	8	9	6	5	2
4	6	8	3	9	5	2	1	7
2	5	9	4	7	1	8	3	6
1	3	7	2	6	8	9	4	5
3	7	6	8	1	2	5	9	4
8	2	5	9	3	4	7	6	1
9	1	4	7	5	6	3	2	8

TV CRITIC'S CORNER

BY LISA WEIDENFELD

NETFLIX

Kristen Johnston (left) and Leanne Morgan in "Leanne."

This week: A Mary Oliver documentary, the return of 'Adults,' and more

The documentary "Mary Oliver: Saved by the Beauty of the World" debuts on PBS at 9 p.m. on Tuesday, then streams for 28 days for free. Oliver, who died in 2019, was a Pulitzer Prize-winning poet who made her home in Provincetown for many years. Highlights include Stephen Colbert struggling to read one of her most famous poems without breaking into tears (it's the one that ends "Tell me, what is it you plan to do with your one wild and precious life?," and if the very thought of that doesn't bring a lump to your throat, you're made of sterner stuff than Colbert and this writer). Filmmaker and longtime Provincetown resident John Waters, who knew Oliver himself, provides an important counter-dose of levity to the proceedings, helping to craft a vision of the real person.

The Gen Z comedy "Adults" returns for its second season on FX at 9 p.m. Thursday, and streaming on Hulu. I found the first season a bit manic, but the series, about a group of friends all living in one pal's childhood home in Queens, has a clear comedic voice and a talented group of giving-thrill-all performers. Two episodes will air weekly on FXX, while the whole series will drop on Hulu at once.

On the other end of the generational spectrum is the second season of "Leanne," Netflix's comedy about a woman finding her way after a late-middle-age divorce, out Thursday. Based on the comedy of star Leanne Morgan, the show costars Kristen Johnston as Leanne's sister and Ryan Stiles as her unexpectedly ex-husband. The first season was enjoyable but still finding its footing in some ways; the new season finds Leanne confronting turning 60 and caring for her aging parents.

One of the stranger aspects of the streaming era is that a new Robert De Niro movie can be coming out, and it's not even going to be in movie theaters. Such is the case with "The Whisper Man," out Friday on Netflix. De Niro stars alongside Adam Scott and Michelle Monaghan in this thriller about a grieving family confronting the possibility that a notorious serial killer may have had an apprentice.

In news destined to make everyone extra conscious of the passage of time, Cartoon Network's animation block Adult Swim celebrates 25 years with "The Robot Chicken [adult swim] 25th Anniversary Special," out Sunday at midnight on Cartoon Network and streaming on HBO Max the next day. The special, done in the trademark stop motion animation style of "Robot Chicken," celebrates a variety of beloved Adult Swim properties, including the "Aqua Teen Hunger Force" characters the Mooninites, who were the focus of a bomb scare in Boston back in 2007.

Lisa Weidenfeld can be reached at lisa.weidenfeld@globe.com. Follow her on X @LisaWeidenfeld and Instagram @lisaweidenfeld.

ASKING ERIC

Cousin is a good cook with a filthy house

Q. I have a first cousin who is a very good cook and likes to invite people over for dinner. She has a good job in the medical field. She is not overtly depressed. The problem is the house-keeping and upkeep of the kitchen.

Filthy doesn't describe the full essence of the situation. There is hoarding, litter boxes that haven't been cleaned for days (weeks?), an overflow of trash spilling into the walkway of the kitchen, food in opened and un-opened containers across all counters, et cetera.

The bathroom is also often filthy. You need to experience it to completely understand.

She is relentless in the invites. Pleasant responses of "Let's eat out" or "How about you coming here?" are met with deaf ears. The requests continue, but we have run out of polite and pleasant responses.

What is the best way to let her know that we cannot eat or visit in her home but enjoy her company outside of her home?

LOST MY APPETITE

A. It may not be the most pleasant conversation, but it will help her if you're direct about the issues you're having.

It sounds like there's reason for concern about the state of her home. Your description is not of a place that's healthy for her or others. So, your best recourse is to tell her that she's a very good cook and you enjoy her company, but you have concerns about her home and you're wondering if she shares those.

Try to use specific examples instead of painting with a broad brush. Ask her if she's noticed the same thing and if this is an area in which she could use support. It may be that no one has ever pointed this out to her directly.

She could very well know about her hoarder tendencies and other cleanliness issues but not know how to address them. So, the conversation with you also serves as an offer: There is help available. If accepted, it will make her life easier and make it easier for people to accept her invitations.

Q. My mom is 90. I am the youngest of two. My mom has always preferred my sibling to me. I basically raised myself and had to accept that I did not matter.

My mom and sibling now have health issues, and I am left to deal with my mom, who still does not like me. She says mean and hurtful things but still expects me to deal with things for her.

Short of walking away, how do I deal with such a parent? She cannot afford a paid guardian.

NOT THE FAVORED CHILD

A. I'm sorry that the effort you're putting in with your mother is being met with unkindness.

Set a clear boundary with her around communication. Tell her what kind of talk you won't put up with and if she crosses the line, remind her that this is not how things are going to go.

You don't have to resort to threats but be firm: "I am taking care of you, and I will not be spoken to like that."

In non-urgent situations, you can step away if she refuses to relent, then regroup or come back at another time.

Depending on what kind of care your mother needs, there may be other options for assistance beyond a paid guardian. Think about what you can entrust to others; talk to your mother's health care provider or consult with your local Department of Aging about resources that can give you some space.

Q. I can empathize with "Stuck Wife," who wanted to travel but felt stuck at home with a husband suffering from neuropathy.

I am a caregiver for my sister, who is in a wheelchair, and felt disappointment at not being able to go to all of the places I wanted to visit for so many years.

However, I found that many of the places I've wanted to visit have now become wheelchair accessible, and we've been able to travel (though it does take an extra step of calling ahead to make certain that points of interest are wheelchair accessible).

If the letter writer's husband is willing to rent an electric wheelchair or scooter, perhaps "Stuck Wife" can still travel with her husband. No, she won't be able to climb Mt. Everest with him, but he can possibly still kayak, raft, zip line, visit museums, or lie on the beach or next to her at the pool drinking wine and watching the sun go down.

There's always a way to make it work.

SEEING THE WORLD

A. Yes! This is a great point.

Changes to physical mobility may impact how we engage with the world, but they do not necessarily mean that the world is completely cut off.

R. Eric Thomas can be reached at eric@askingeric.com.

Monday August 24, 2026

	7 pm	7:30	8 pm	8:30	9 pm	9:30	10 pm	10:30	11 pm	11:30
2	WGBH PBS BBC News	R. Steves	Antiques Roadshow	Antiques "New York City Hour 1"	Antiques "New York City Hour 1"	POV "How to Build a Library" (N)	Aman-pour (N)
4	WBZ CBS Wheel of Fortune	Jeopardy!	Neighbor	Neighbor	FBI "Ratlined"	CIA "Elimination Game"	News (N)	(35) Comics
5	WCVB ABC News	Chronicle	Dancing With-Stars (N)		Million Paul Scheer, Rob Huebel	Celebrity Fam. Sheila E., En Vogue	NewsCenter 5	(35) J. Kimmel
6	WLNE ABC Videos		Whose	Whose	Whose	Whose	Saturday Night Live	Saturday Night Live
7	WHDH Inside (N)	Extra (N)	Family Feud	Family Feud	7 News at 9PM (N)	7 News at 10PM (N)	7 News at 11PM (N)	(35) Inside
9	WMUR ABC Chronicle	News (N)	Dancing (N)		Who Wants to Be	Celebrity Fam.	News (N)	J.Kimmel
10	NBC Boston Boston News (N)	Holly-wood (N)	American Ninja Warrior National Finals 3 (N)		The Wall "Ellie and Nick" (N)	Boston News (N)	(35) J. Fallon (N)
10	WJAR NBC News (Live)	Extra (N)	American Ninja Warrior National Finals 3 (N)		The Wall "Ellie and Nick" (N)	News (Live)	(35) J. Fallon (N)
11	WENH PBS Week-ends	Rosendo	Antiques Roadshow	Antiques "New York City Hour 1"	POV "How to Build a Library" (N)	Aman-pour (N)
12	WPRI CBS Wheel of Fortune	Jeopardy!	Neighbor	Neighbor	FBI "Ratlined"	CIA "Elimination Game"	12 News at 11 (N)	(35) Comics
25	WFXT FOX ET (N)	TMZ (N)	Beat Shazam "Shazam Bowl; Shazam and Chill!" (N)		Boston 25 News at 10PM (N)	(Live) News (Live)	(35) News (N)
27	WUNI Rosa "Cosecha de inocencia" (N)	Tan cerca de ti, nace el amor (N)			Guardián de mi vida (N)	Corazón "¡Feliz cumple Tere!" (N)	Noticias Univisión	(35) Noticiero
36	WSBE PBS R. Steves	Week-ends	Nature		Martin Clunes: Islands of America	TURN: Washington's Spies	PBS News Hour
38	WSBK Big Bang	Big Bang	WBZ News 8p (N)		48 Hours	Perfect	Perfect	Flip Side	Flip Side
44	WGBX PBS Test Kitchen	Antiques	Midsomer "Birds of Prey: Part 1"		Inspector George Gently "Gently Among Friends"		Antiques	PBS News Hour (N)
50	WWJE 48 Hours		Heartland Homicide		Homicide Hunt	Crime Stories	Unusual Suspects
56	WLVI CW Young Sheldon	Young Sheldon	All American "Best Friends" (N)		Penn & Teller: Fool Us "Sleight of Foot" (N)	7 News at 10PM on CW56 (N)	Modern Family	Modern Family
64	WNAC FOX Family Feud	Family Feud	Beat Shazam "Shazam Bowl; Shazam and Chill!" (N)		12 News on Fox Pr (N)		Seinfeld	Seinfeld
68	WBXP ION Chicago P.D. "Pain Killer"	Chicago P.D. "This City"	Chicago P.D. "What Could Have Been"		Chicago P.D. "Sacrifice"		Chicago P.D. "Confession"
PREMIUM CABLE
Cinemax	(6:00) Nanny ...	(5:50) ★★★ American Made ('17) Domhnall Gleeson, Tom Cruise.	(4:45) ★★ Ricochet ('91) John Lithgow, Ice-T, Denzel Washington.		(6:25) Shot Caller
Flix	(6:05) ★★ Congo ('95) Dylan Walsh.	★★★★ Terminator 2: Judgment Day ('91) Linda Hamilton, Arnold Schwarzenegger.	(6:20) ★★★ Total Recall ('90) Rachel Ticotin, Arnold Schwarzenegger.
HBO	(6:20) Last Week To.	Lanterns	(5:55) Conan O'	(4:40) ★★ Sinners ('25) Hailee Steinfeld, Miles Caton, Michael B. Jordan.
HBO 2	Yogurt Murder "Mental Evidence"	Yogurt Murder "In Your Own Time"	The Yogurt Shop Murders "The End of Wondering"	(4:40) ★★★ The Drama ('26) Phineas and Ferb
Paramount-Sho	(5:45) ★★★★★ Million Dollar Baby	Lioness "Murder Hornets" (N)	Body Cam ('20) Nat Wolff, David Zayas, Mary J. Blige.	(4:45) ★★ Terminator: Dark Fate ('19) Linda Hamilton.
Showtime 2	(6:15) ★★ The Hangover ('09)	★ Wild Wild West ('99) Kevin Kline, Will Smith.	★ ★★ Get Hard ('15) Kevin Hart, Craig T. Nelson, Will Ferrell.	Hangover Part II
Starz!	(5:30) Roll Bounce	(6:25) ★★ Phat Girlz ('06) Jimmy Jean-Louis, Mo'Nique.	(6:05) Fightland		(4:40) Now You See ...
TMC	(6:15) ★★ A Bad Moms Christmas	★★★ Shakespeare in Love ('98) Gwyneth Paltrow, Geoffrey Rush, Joseph Fiennes.	(6:05) ★★★ Bridget Jones's Diary ('01) Renée Zellweger.		(4:45) Bridget J...
SPORTS
CBSSN	(6:00) PGA Tour Golf BMW Championship, Final Round (N)		Poker Night in America (N)		PGA Tour Golf
ESPN	2026 Little League Baseball World Series Game 24: Teams TBA (N)	(Live)	Fantasy Football Now Season Preview (Live)		SportsCenter (N)
ESPN2	Fantasy Football Now (N)	(Live)	Where It Lies (N)	Where It Lies	Where It Lies	Lies The Patch	NFL Live Marcus Spears
Fox Sports 1	(6:30) MLB Baseball Tampa Bay Rays at Detroit Tigers From Comerica Park in Detroit. (N)	(Live)	MLB Baseball Cincinnati Reds at San Francisco Giants From Oracle Park in San Francisco. (N)		(Live)
Golf	Big Break x	Big Break x	PGA Tour Golf BMW Championship, Final Round
NBA	(6:30) WNBA	Top 100 Dunks	Top 50	NBA Playback
NBC Sports	Early Edition	Best of Felger & Mazz	Best of Zolak and Bertrand		Boston Sports (N)	Boston Sports
NESN	(6:30) Baseball Boston Red Sox at Miami Marlins	Extra (N)	Red Sox	Chat (N)
FAMILY
Cartoon	Burgers	Burgers	Burgers	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	FamilyGuy	RickMorty	RickMorty
Disney	Big City Greens	Big City Greens	Phineas and Ferb	Phineas and Ferb	Phineas and Ferb	Phineas and Ferb	Kiff	Ladybug	Ladybug	Ladybug
Encore Family	(6:45) Monster Zone	(6:10) My Sweet Monster ('21)	(5:50) The Giant King ('12) Russell Peters.
Nickelodeon	Friends	Friends	Friends	Friends	Friends	Big Bang	Big Bang	Big Bang	Big Bang	Big Bang
Nick Jr.	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..	Peppa Pig	Peppa Pig	Peppa Pig	Peppa Pig	PAWPatr..	PAWPatr..

Content Ratings: TV-Y Appropriate for all children; TV-Y7 For children age 7 and older; TV-G General audience; TV-PG Parental guidance suggested; TV-14 May be unsuitable for children under 14; TV-MA Mature audience only Additional symbols: D Suggestive dialogue; FV Fantasy violence; L Strong language; S Sexual activity; V Violence; HD High-Definition; (CC) Close-Captioned

	News		Specials
	7 pm	7:30	8 pm	8:30	9 pm	9:30	10 pm	10:30	11 pm	11:30
BASIC CABLE
A&E	Live PD: Greatest Shifts "Episode 31"	Live PD: Greatest Shifts "Episode 17"	Live PD: Great. "Episode 32" (N)				Live PD: Great. "Episode 33" (N)		(05) Live PD: Great. "Episode 30"
AMC	★★★ The Departed	(06) Matt Damon, Leonardo DiCaprio.						★★★ Gran Torino ('08)
Animal Planet	Alaskan "Block and Tackle"	Alaskan "Shots Fired"		Alaskan "Rock, Paper, Skipper"		Alaskan "Dock-u-Drama"		Alaskan "Dead in the Water"
BBC America	(5:30) ★★★ True Lies ('94)			★★ Kindergarten Cop ('90)					Law "Fluency"
BET	Celebrity Family Feud Ben Schwartz		BiG3 Basketball						Martin	Martin
Bravo	Below Deck "Eiffel Power"		Below Deck "Blasts From the Past" (N)		Next Gen NYC "No EffsGiving"		The Real Housewives		Below Deck "Blasts From the Past"
CMT	Mama's	Mama's	Reba	(35) Reba	(10) Reba	(40) Reba	(15) Reba	(50) Reba	GoldGirls
CNN	OutFront	(Live)	Cooper 360	The Source With		CNN NewsNight		Laura (Live)
Comedy Central	The Office	(35) The Office	(10) The Office	(45) The Office	(20) The Office		(55) The Office	The Office	Family Guy	Family Guy
CSPAN	(6:00) Public Affairs		C-SPAN Primetime				C-SPAN Primetime
CSPAN2	(6:00) Public Affairs		Public Affairs Events				Public Affairs Events
Dest. America	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront	Lakefront
Discovery	Contraband: Seized		Contraband (N)		120 Hours Be. (N)		120 Hours Be.		120 Hours Be.
Discovery Life	Dr. Pimple Popper		Dr. Pimple Popper		Dr. Pimple Popper		Dr. Pimple Popper		Dr. Pimple Popper
E!	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Two Men	Cocktail	Cocktail	How I Met	How I Met
Encore	(2:25) ★★ The Stepford Wives ('04)		★★ Shutter Island ('10)			Beat Bobby		Beat Bobby	(2:20) ★★ John Q
Food	Beat Bobby	Beat Bobby	Pitmasters "Backyard BBQ"		Pitmasters "The Whole Hog" (N)		Beat Bobby	Beat Bobby	Beat Bobby	Beat Bobby
Fox News	Ingraham (Live)		Jesse (N) (Live)		Hannity (Live)		Gutfeld!		Fox News (Live)
Freeform	Movie	(3:35) ★★ Edward Scissorhands ('90) Johnny Depp.	Somebody Knows				The 700 Club
FUSE	Diddy: Monster's Fall		Bobby & Whitney			Jackson-Truth		Cheaters		Cheaters
FX	(6:00) ★★★ Iron Man 3 ('13)				Sunny		★★★ Mission: Impossible -- Fallout ('18)
FXM	(1:10) ★★ The Night House ('20)				(2:20) ★★ The Night House ('20) Rebecca Hall.				Movie
Hallmark	(6:00) A Harvest We...		Sweet Autumn ('20)		Nikki DeLoach.		Gold Girls	Gold Girls	Gold Girls	Gold Girls
Hallmark Myst.	(6:00) Mystery 101: ...		Mystery 101 "Words Can Kill"				Murder, She Wrote		Murder, She Wrote
HGTV	Ugliest House in America		Ugliest House "The Hideous Heartland"		Ugliest House in America (N)		Totally '90s (N)	Totally '90s (N)	House Hunters	House Hunters
History	Mysteries "Gardner Museum Robbery"		History's Greatest Mysteries		Mysteries "Lost Civil War Gold" (N)		(05) History's Greatest Mysteries		(05) History's Greatest Mysteries
HLN	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic	Forensic
HSN	Fall Home Solutions		Gabor Wigs		The Real (N) (Live)		The Real Deal		Fall Home (N) (Live)
ID	Fatal Vows "Sins of the Heart"		Neighbor "The Enemy Upstairs"		A Killer "Rivalry Fueled Murder" (N)		Game Day "A Future Cut Short" (N)		Murder in the "Shallow Grave"
IFC	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond	Raymond
Lifetime	NCIS "Forced Entry"		NCIS "Chained"		NCIS "Blackwater"		(05) NCIS		(05) NCIS
LMN	(6:00) Murder at the...		The Beach Read Murders ('25)				The Book Club Murders ('24)
MAGN	Maine		Maine		Maine (N)		Maine		Maine
MSNBC	The Weeknight		All in (Live)		The Rachel		Last Word (Live)		The 11th (Live)
MTV	Ridiculous		Ridiculous		Ridiculous		Ridiculous		Ridiculous
National Geographic	UFOs: Inv. "The UFO Whistleblower"		UFOs: Investigating "Pilots Speak Out"		UFOs: Investigating the Unknown		UFOs: Investigating the Unknown		UFOs: Investigating the Unknown
NatGeoWild	The Incredible		The Incredible		The Incredible		The Incredible		The Incredible
NECN	News	News	Dateline		Dateline		Rescue		OpenHou...	1st Look
NewsNation	Vargas Report		Cuomo		On Balance		Katie Pavlich		Jesse Web
Ovation	Murdoch Mysteries		Hope Street		Murdoch Mysteries		Murdoch Mysteries		Murdoch Mysteries
OWN	Videos		Videos		Videos		Videos		Videos
Oxygen	Snapped		Snapped		Snapped		Snapped		Snapped
Paramount	(6:00) Old School		★★ Tommy Boy ('95)		David Spade, Chris Farley.		★★ Old School ('03)
QVC	(6:00) PM Style (N)		Peace Love (N)		Menopause (N)		Get un (N) (Live)		Jewelry (N) (Live)
Science	Forbidden History		Forbidden History		Forbidden History		Forbidden History		Forbidden History
Sundance	NCIS "Cover Story"		NCIS "Brothers in Arms"		NCIS "In the Dark"		NCIS "Trojan Horse"		NCIS "Angel of Death"
SyFy	(4:00) Oppenheimer		★★ Five Nights at Freddy's ('23) Josh Hutcherson.				★★ Escape Room ('19)
TBS	Big Bang		Big Bang		Big Bang		Big Bang		Office	Office
TCM	(6:00) Brainstorm		★★★ Laura ('44)			(4:45) Beyond a Reasonable Doubt			(15) Loved One
TLC	Last Resort		Last Resort (N)		Last Resort (N)		Baylen Out Loud		Double Lives
TNT	(6:30) Road House ('24) Jake Gyllenhaal.				The Librarians (N)		The Librarians		★★ Skyscraper
Travel	(6:00) Mysteries		Mysteries of the Unknown				Mysteries of the Unknown
TruTV	★★ Angels in the Outfield ('94)				(15) Super Bowl XXXVII			Super Bowl XLI (N)
TV Land	Raymond		Raymond		Raymond		Raymond		(10) King	(50) King
TV One	CosbySh..		CosbySh..		Fatal Attraction		Fatal Attraction (N)		For My Man (N)
USA	Law & Order: SVU "Intoxicated"		WNBA Basketball Minnesota Lynx (N) (Live)			Golden State Valkyries at Minnesota Lynx (N) (Live)			Anna Pigeon "The Preacher"	Law-SVU "Parts"
VH-1	Movie		★★★ 8 Mile ('02) Kim Basinger, Eminem.				★★ ATL ('06) Lauren London, T.I..
WE	Criminal Minds		Criminal "The Pact"			Criminal Minds		Criminal Minds		Criminal Minds	