New models to boost e-scooters

VIKRAM CHAUDHARY
New Delhi, August 29

NEW LAUNCHES IN the coming months promise to accelerate sales of electric scooters, a trend already visible in India's two-wheeler market. The first launch happened on Saturday, when Ather rode in the Konarc priced at ₹99,999. Built on Ather's new EL platform — short for Enlightened — it is a next-generation EV product designed for the mass market, which aims to pull customers from petrol leaders like the Honda Activa.

The Konarc will soon be joined by Simple Energy's family-focused Simple Wave, Honda's made-in-India QC3, the high-performance Ultraviolet Tesseract, and Yamaha's expanding electric scooter portfolio.

● ANIL CHADHA, MANAGING DIRECTOR, ITC HOTELS

'Our push is premium; a budget brand just food for thought'

Less than two years of becoming an independent company, ITC Hotels is staying its course as a premium brand, with plans to expand aggressively both domestically and abroad. Managing director Anil Chadha speaks with Twinder Gill on the road ahead, new brands, impact of AI, and more. Edited excerpts:

At 250 hotels and 22,000 rooms by 2031, what will ITC Hotels look like economically? Your managed portfolio will grow from 8,600 to 15,000 keys by then, which makes it about two-third of total assets.

THE FIVE-YEAR PLAN
■ To allocate 10-12% of cumulative revenue towards capital allocation
■ In final stages of hotel deal in Dubai, more hotels in proximal markets of Sri Lanka, Nepal
■ From 40:60 ratio of owned vs managed assets, a target of 33:67 ratio
■ Aiming for 50-55% premiumisation of portfolio from current 40-42%
875 keys operational in religious sites, with another 1,400 signed and managed assets, which we aspire to take to 33:67 in five years. We signed 87 hotels in the past three years, and opened more than 29 hotels in the last two years. For our own portfolio we are at 5,700 keys today, which we have to take to 7,500 keys. Of this, 900 are already signed. In the managed portfolio, we have to go from 8,600 to 15,000 keys, which is 1,200-1,300 keys a year, and we are completely on track to achieve this target.

What proportion of revenue do you expect management fees to contribute by then?
We earned a management fee of ₹135 crore in FY25, and had set a target to make it 2.5x in three-five years. So we are targeting maybe around ₹350 crore.

Among these 250 hotels, which brands will you focus on and for which geographies. What about expansion abroad after Colombo and Nepal? You have talked about Middle-East and proximal markets. What about Europe, US and south-east Asia?
I'll be happy to venture there, but only when we have something in hand.

No chores, it's food, fun and games at the mall

● Supermarkets slow, F&B and entertainment up
SUGANDHA MUKHERJEE
New Delhi, August 29

MALLS ARE INCREASINGLY becoming hangout zones, with food & beverage and entertainment taking up a significantly larger share. The two categories together accounted for around 32% of mall leasing space in H12026, up from about 20% in 2020, as per Anarock Group.

Entertainment, including cinemas, gaming and experiential attractions, has more than doubled its share from 8% to 17%, while F&B has risen from 12% to 15% over the same period. The shift is reshaping the mall business as developers seek categories that can bring consumers in frequently and keep them there for longer. But data also show that the rise of F&B and experiences is not coming primarily at the expense of fashion. Apparel remains the largest category, accounting for 33% of mall leasing space in H12026, compared with 35% in 2020. The biggest loser has been the department store and hypermarket, whose share has collapsed from 14% to 4% over the same period, shows Anarock data. "Entertainment is the standout, growing the fastest of all categories over this period and now sitting at its highest sustained share (17%) since the 2022 post-Covid spike," said Anuj Kejriwal, CEO, retail and CEO-Europe, Middle East & Africa, Anarock Group.

HDFC Bank CEO to step down

● Jagdishan opts to retire, not seek re-appointment
KSHIPRA PETKAR
Mumbai, August 29

SASHIDHAR JAGDISHAN, MD & CEO of HDFC Bank, has decided not to seek re-appointment when his term ends on October 26, the country's largest private sector lender said in an exchange filing on Saturday. Jagdishan, who has spent 27 years at the bank, stuck to his decision despite the board urging him to reconsider. "At its meeting held today, the Board of Directors took note of Mr Sashidhar Jagdishan's communication to not seek re-appointment. Despite persuasion, Mr Jagdishan reiterated his decision to not seek re-appointment," the bank said. The board will now fast-track the search for a successor, aiming to complete the selection and appointment process well before Jagdishan steps down. Reportedly, HDFC Bank's new Chairman Rajiv Kumar met Reserve Bank of India (RBI) Governor Sanjay Malhotra last week, with sources saying the meeting was primarily aimed at assessing the board's position on Jagdishan's re-appointment.

TO CHALLENGE PLAN IN NCLAT

Lenders up in arms over Chandra order

● LIC HFL, Union and Canara banks join HDFC Bank

FE BUREAU
Mumbai, August 29
AFTER HDFC BANK, public sector lenders Union Bank of India, Canara Bank and LIC Housing Finance (LIC HFL) have also decided to challenge before the National Company Law Appellate Tribunal (NCLAT) the order approving a repayment plan for Essel Group founder Subhash Chandra, passed by the National Company Law Tribunal (NCLT). The lenders had voted against the repayment plan, under which creditors will receive just ₹6.25 crore against admitted claims of ₹22,006.57 crore.

Lenders up in arms over NCLT order

THE PLAN ENTAILS a recovery of around 0.03% for creditors.

Union Bank of India (UK), in a media statement Saturday, said it had rejected the repayment plan and opposed its approval before the NCLT. Union Bank held a 0.76% voting share in the proceedings. "Now, Union Bank of India (UK) is immediately challenging the decision of NCLT before NCLAT," it said.

Canara Bank, which had a 1.60% voting share, also said it had voted against the plan and was filing an appeal before the NCLAT. The bank had sought a forensic audit of the matter, but the request was not allowed due to its minority voting share.

LIC Housing Finance, which held a 6.09% voting share, also opposed the plan and said it would immediately file an appeal before the NCLAT along with other public financial institutions.

The repayment plan was approved with the support of financial creditors representing 80.81% of the voting share, despite opposition from several lenders, including Axis Bank, Canara Bank, HDFC Bank, LIC HFL, RBL Bank and Union Bank.

The NCLT had said the approved plan would be binding on all creditors, including those that voted against it, under Section 115 of the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Code (IBC).

₹6.25 cr against admitted claims of ₹22,006.57 cr

HDFC Bank had on Thursday said it was "exploring an appeal" before the NCLAT against the order.

The private lender had said its admitted claim accounted for 3.2% of the total claims and that the facility had been inherited from erstwhile HDFC Limited.

Chandra has been facing insolvency proceedings since 2022 after Indiabulls Housing Finance, now known as Sammaan Capital, approached the NCLT over a personal guarantee provided by him for a ₹170-crore loan extended to Vivek Infracon. The insolvency plea was admitted in 2024.

No chores, it's food, fun and games at the mall

ENTERTAINMENT'S SHARE BRIEFLY surged to 32% in 2022 following the lifting of Covid restrictions and pent-up demand for cinemas and entertainment, before settling at 17% in H1 2026. Similarly, F&B reached 22% in 2025, before easing to 15%. "Consumer expectations have evolved over the past few years and malls today are much more than shopping destinations," said Pushpa Bector, group executive director & business head, DLF Retail, which operates DLF Mall of India & DLF Promenade in NCR. "People are looking for places where they can shop, dine, catch a movie, spend time with family and discover something new—all in a single visit," she added.

Shibu Philips, director, LuLu Group India, which has malls in south India & Lucknow, said at LuLu, F&B space has nearly tripled from around 10% when its first mall opened in 2013 to 28% today. Philips said food

At the smaller end of the organised mall market, Elan Group's Gurugram properties have seen nearly 4X growth in footfall over two-three years, with F&B emerging as the strongest driver. "We are increasingly allocating 20-25% of our space to F&B, with a further nearly 20% dedicated to entertainment and experiential concepts," said Ankit Sharma, senior vice-president, leasing, Elan Group.

The restaurant industry is seeing the same change. At SOCIAL, Satyajit Dhingra, COO, Impresario Entertainment & Hospitality, said the mall customer increasingly builds several occasions into one visit. "Food and beverage has always been part of the mall journey, but today it plays a much stronger role in shaping the mood and experience of that visit," Dhingra said.

Vikrant Batra, director & co-founder, Batra Bros, which owns Cafe Delhi Heights, said developers are increasingly recognising that F&B is not merely a support category for retail. "It is one of the strongest drivers of footfalls, dwell time and repeat visits. However, the answer is not simply to add more restaurants. Malls need distinctive brands that people remember, seek out and are willing to visit specifically," said Batra.

"We have been achieving around 14% same store sales growth, which is among the strongest in the market. At our mall outlets, we are also seeing healthy growth in customer volumes," said Sumit Dhiman, president, Daryaganj Hospitality.

PVR INOX recorded around 150 million admissions in FY26, as per Gautam Dutta, CEO-revenue & operations, PVR INOX. Weekend traffic remains higher, but offers have strengthened weekday traffic, with some weekdays achieving occupancy comparable with weekends. "Cine-

HDFC Bank CEO to step down

JAGDISHAN'S SIX-YEAR TENURE has been marked by the landmark merger with Housing Development Finance Corporation (HDFC), as well as a series of regulatory, legal and governance challenges. He took charge as MD & CEO on October 27, 2020, succeeding Aditya Puri, who had led HDFC Bank since its inception. While Jagdishan's tenure included the merger of HDFC Bank with its parent HDFC—one of the largest transactions in corporate India—it faced scrutiny following regulatory interventions and governance-related controversies. Barely two months after he took charge, the RBI in December 2020 barred HDFC Bank from adding new credit card customers and launching new digital initiatives following repeated technology outages. The restrictions were subsequently lifted in phases.

Our push is premium: ITC Hotels MD

THERE COULD DEFINITELY be more hotels in all three proximal markets of Sri Lanka, Nepal and Dubai. We are talking to various people, but things are still in preliminary stages. For Dubai, we are in the final stages to negotiate a good hotel. The domestic growth will come from Stori, Welcome and Fortune brands. It is important to go to new locations, to expand your flag. Currently we are entering Kerala. We have expanded well in the past few years in Himachal Pradesh and are now looking at Madhya Pradesh. We've already opened one hotel in Bihar and signed two more. Next we are trying to get an entry into Northeast. I don't think a hotel chain really is choosing where you don't want to be. Wherever air traffic is increasing, that's the best place to be in. As the country increases its infrastructure, a lot of hotspots will emerge. Those will be our targets.

are very, very good. The hospitality, service, room sizes, breakfast, the entire warmth is very good. In terms of the dollar, we are still not caught up on prices as compared to places like Dubai or Singapore.

Can technology & AI actually take costs out of a hotel or reduce employees without damaging luxury service?

Technology will enable growth, but it is not that tomorrow you will put a machine and reduce two people. It will make decisions faster and efficient. For example, our customer relation tool can analyse every guest's habits based on data, based on which the hotel provides customised service. But a luxury hotel can certainly not put ten robots out to serve drinks. People pay for bespoke experiences that are warm and personal. And, in luxury, you should never cut costs.

Asset-right vs asset-light. What determines when ITC Hotels will actually own a hotel rather than merely managing it? You recently acquired a Welcomhotel in Ahmedabad, converting a managed property into an owned one. What return threshold must an owned hotel clear? Are you looking at more acquisitions?

The asset right path is one of our pillars. Where we find a good piece of land, we are buying it. We have our own land in Yashobhoomi, which is a fantastic location for a hotel. We have bought a good property in Kerala. Ahmedabad is a good market to be in. We already have ITC Narmada and a Fortune Hotel, and plan to get some more hotels there. As for threshold, it must be the right valuation. It's not that you've got money in the bank and you must spend it. We are a young company, and post demerger, we have made three big acquisitions already.

Now that ITC Hotels is an independent listed company, how has your approach to capital allocation changed?

We are going to incur 10-12% of the cumulative revenue towards capital allocation. We

Is Epiq focused on religious tourism? You have two in Puri and Tirupati.

Epiq, our new brand, will cover the upper upscale space. We have already signed three hotels, of which one is our own. It is not a religious brand, and the locations just so happened. However, we are focused heavily on religious tourism. Today we have 875 keys operational in religious sites, with another 1,400 signed. We are seeing a 3x growth in places like Amritsar, Katra, Tirupati, Haridwar, Puri, Prayagraj, Rishikesh, Bodhi Gaya. We just signed a 100-plus key hotel in Salasar, which reportedly has the country's biggest Hanuman temple.

A brand for the Gen Z is missing. Stori is boutique, but is there any dedicated segment for the youth in the pipeline?

I think the youth are experiencing all kinds of hotels and are changing the entire picture. We are seeing that the gap between weekday and weekend occupancy has reduced, even in business hotels. Staycations are popular, and youth today are willing to spend on luxuries. Our Stori brand is very popular among

TOGETHER, THESE NEW launches across entry, family and premium brackets are expected to give overall electric scooter sales a major boost. Scooters sales trends so far this financial year (April-July FY27) reveal a clear pattern — e-scooters are moving up the ranks and taking over the mid-tier of national charts. While the Honda Activa & TVS Jupiter maintain overall market leadership, petrol bestsellers have seen plateauing growth. Activa dispatches are dropping 13% year-on-year in July. Electric models have taken over the upper-middle ranks of the top 10. The TVS iQube and Bajaj Chetak sold nearly 350,000 units combined between April and July, out-selling popular 125cc petrol models such as the TVS Ntorq. The Chetak registered a 307% surge in July to touch 47,184 units, while the iQube set a record with 59,386 units in July alone. Ather's Rizta drove steady growth, lifting Ather's cumulative four-month presence to over 88,000 units.

“We are seeing a structural shift in urban two-wheeler buying,” said a senior two-wheeler market analyst working with one of the Big 4 consultancy firms. “Electric scooters are no longer limited to early adopters. Practical family-oriented electric scooters are replacing 110cc and 125cc petrol scooters in top 10 charts, and upcoming launches like the Ather Konarc

GST Council to meet on Sept 12

“THE FORTHCOMING 57TH meeting now presents an opportunity to build on that foundation by shifting the reform agenda beyond revenue considerations towards greater policy certainty, technology-driven administration and a more predictable tax environment,” Mishra said. The Council, chaired by FM, should prioritise reducing litigation, take up issues related to input tax credit and the transition from compensation cess, Mishra said. This is the right time to revive the conversation on bringing petroleum products within the GST framework, he said.

The Council can take up the simplification in GST registration of businesses with tax credit of over ₹2.5 lakh per month. Last week, Central Board of Indirect Taxes member Sanjay Mangal said the central & state governments were working on a uniform circular for registration of large businesses.

New rules OF WORK

There are no rules, says a new book, only opportunities, which need to be grabbed, sometimes from AI too

MADAN SABNAVIS

THE MARK ON LinkedIn which says you are open to work is quite profound because it also means that you are willing for change. Take this forward and you have the book Open to Work by the CEO and CEOO (chief economic opportunity officer) of LinkedIn which talks about how one should handle AI in this uncertain world. Yes, it is a challenge for sure just like how the steam engine was during the industrial revolution. But one has to work one's way around it and use it to take care of the efficiency aspect, while we humans work where we are best — thinking.

Open to Work is a very relevant book in this age when there is a lot of apprehension about what AI will do considering that prime facie it looks like that all jobs are replaceable. But Roslansky and Raman, the authors of this book, argue that the future belongs to those who are willing to adapt and change. This is where they talk of the five Cs which require human beings that cannot be replicated by AI. The first is 'curiosity', where the mind is important. Any innovation, like say, even the light-bulb or vaccines, can use AI to physically create formulations. But to conceptualise it and understand how they work requires a human.

The second is 'courage' — to draw up strategies and make them work by implementing them. Here AI can throw up alternative strategies for a company. But to understand what can and will not work requires the human mind and hence here we as individuals need to equip ourselves to gain the requisite knowledge on interpreting these solutions in a real world context.

The third is 'creativity', where we use our minds for non-routine and mundane stuff. Hence programming for a software can be taken care of by technology but making sure it fits with the requirements is a human's job. Accounts can be compiled and put forward in a compact manner by AI but interpreting things for the management is a job for the human being.

Interestingly, the authors point out that AI is a bigger threat to white-collar rather than blue-collar workers. This is because a lot of what software professionals or accountants do can be done better by AI. But when it comes to construction for example, it is the human skill that is required. That's why there is growing demand for vocational courses for skill building. We can't say the same for data analysts or web designers. They point out that over 500 skills can be affected by AI, which can give one shivers.

The authors use the power of LinkedIn while writing this book as they analyse the profiles and views of over 1.3 billion users or members to draw these rather far-reaching conclusions. In fact, they call the thinking part of the human being as being entrepreneurial, which is what we should excel at. AI is a purely efficiency enhancer which gives space for the mind to function and innovate to come up with solutions.

The authors aver that AI can be likened with, say electricity, which is a general purpose technology that affects every corner of society. We have already been witness to the way in which digital technology transformed our lives in the last quarter century or so with the Internet spearheading change along with mobile and cloud services. Things have changed right from the way we conduct meetings to entertainment and now to translation which has given a lot of convenience to people across the world.

The authors are optimistic in general to the way in which society at large will respond to these challenges. They do believe that new skills are emerging and evolving and people are pivoting and adapting, which means that there is acceptance as people want to move ahead and not get left out. Industries are transforming and there is widespread restructuring going on to make this adaptation possible in a seamless manner. This is the good part of the story.

They draw an interesting analogy on adaptation here. Earlier careers were designed to climb a ladder that was structured. But now they say that one has to climb a wall and one can do it from any direction, and this is where the winners will emerge. In short, we cannot fight the future and cannot be like the Luddites during the industrial revolution who refused to accept the inevitable.

The authors divide all jobs into three buckets — tasks that AI can do on its own (routine data crunching and checking for errors), tasks that need collaboration between humans and AI (AI drives patterns and we decide what is suitable) and those which are meant for humans exclusively. The last is very important and is related to emotional intelligence which involves problem solving and ethical judgments among others, which only humans can do.

This is a must read for all those who are in the early or middle stages of their careers. Those who are in the last part have a choice to make when facing this reality and the logical thing is to adapt and get assimilated in the system.

ventions that is continuous and available to almost everyone.

Cox is also good at making complicated science readable. Biological clocks, biomarkers, gut microbiomes and organ ageing can easily become forbidding subjects.

There is almost too much to digest with this book (pun intended). The reader encounters an impressive parade of foods, micronutrients, supplements and possible interventions. Green tea, blueberries, nuts, mushrooms, mustard greens, pomegranate juice and numerous other foods receive attention, alongside omega-3s and a range of other compounds. The cumulative effect can be paradoxical: a book intended to make the science of ageing more understandable can sometimes make eating well appear like another highly technical optimisation problem.

When different nutritional interventions appear to have different, sometimes competing, benefits, the practical question remains: what matters most? The book is stronger at opening possibilities than at reducing them to a definitive prescription. That may partly reflect the science itself. Geroscience is young, nutrition is notoriously difficult to study in isolation, and human beings are not laboratory mice.

Genetics, exercise, sleep, stress, socioeconomic conditions and environment all interact with what we eat. Any book promising a single formula for longevity should, therefore, invite more suspicion than one willing to leave some questions unresolved.

For Indian readers, the book carries an additional resonance. India is undergoing a rapid nutritional transition, with traditional dietary patterns increasingly meeting processed foods, sedentary lifestyles and rising metabolic disease. Our longevity challenge will, therefore, not simply be about helping people live longer. It will increasingly be about ensuring that longer lives are healthier ones. The Age Code is valuable because it brings a complicated scientific question back to a remarkably ordinary human choice. We may not yet know how to stop the clock. But we have considerable influence over what happens to the body while the clock is running.

The most powerful idea in the book may thus be its least futuristic one. Longevity need not begin in a laboratory. It can begin at the dining table.

WE HAVE BECOME remarkably good at adding years to life. The harder question is what those additional years will look like. Longevity has become one of the defining obsessions of our time, drawing technology companies, pharmaceutical researchers, wellness entrepreneurs and wealthy investors into a race to extend the human lifespan. Yet David Cox's The Age Code makes a more grounded proposition: before we look for ways to defeat ageing, perhaps we should pay greater attention to what we are eating every day.

Cox, a neuroscientist-turned-health journalist, who has spent much of the past decade reporting on the emerging science of ageing, begins with himself. After a PhD examining the link between chronic inflammation and psychiatric disorders, he had already spent years following the field. But the story of The Age Code became personal when he took a series of tests and found that he was biologically about two years older than his chronological age. Two years may sound insignificant, but in the language of geroscience it can signal a materially higher risk of long-term health problems. The finding sent him on a nearly three-year investigation, travelling around the world and interviewing hundreds of leading ageing scientists. What he wanted to understand was deceptively simple: why was he ageing faster, and what, if anything, could he do about it?

Chronological age advances inexorably. Biological ageing does not necessarily proceed at the same pace. It reflects the cumulative balance between damage and repair taking place inside our cells and organs. Cox takes the reader into a fast-developing field to understand why some people age faster than others, how different organs can have different biological ages, and whether these processes can be influenced.

Food emerges as one of the most important, and most accessible, levers. Cox takes the reader through an unusually broad terrain. The first part of the book examines modern diets, ultra-processed foods, excess calories, inflammation and premature ageing. The second moves closer to the food itself, exploring micronutrients, hidden hunger, healthy fats, gut health and fibre. The final section asks whether technology can help us understand ageing more precisely, taking in DNA methylation, biological clocks, biomarkers, body clocks and digital twins. The journey is from the supermarket and dining table to the laboratory, and back again.

What we eat may influence not just how long we live, but how well we age

This makes the book more than another catalogue of foods we should eat or avoid. Cox is interested in the biology behind apparently familiar advice. Why does food sometimes create damage and sometimes support repair? What happens when the body receives too few micronutrients even while consuming too many calories? How do gut health, inflammation and metabolic stress interact with ageing? And can we measure the consequences sufficiently well to know whether we are ageing faster or slower?

The book becomes particularly compelling when Cox stops merely reporting the science and subjects himself to it. Across two dietary experiments, he changes his eating habits and repeatedly measures the consequences. A calorie-restricted, nutrient-dense diet reduces his weight, visceral fat and inflammation, while tests suggest that his immune age has moved backwards by roughly two years. In another experiment, he substantially increases his fibre intake, relying on legumes, whole grains, seeds and other fibre-rich foods.

Tests suggest that his rate of biological ageing slows by 16% over five months. The point is not that readers should replicate Cox's precise diets. Indeed, that would miss the book's larger argument. The significance lies in demonstrating that ageing may be more dynamic than we assume.

Some of what we regard as inevitable consequences of getting older may instead be the accumulated consequence of years of choices, environments and behaviours.

This gives The Age Code a useful corrective to the current longevity industry. The market is crowded with supplements, personalised interventions, genetic tests, expensive clinics and technology-driven promises of living longer. Cox is interested in these developments, but remains sceptical of the idea that the answer to ageing necessarily lies in an expensive technological fix. The less glamorous answer may be sitting on our plates.

There is a larger shift here, from lifespan to healthspan. Living to 90 means little if the additional years are dominated by metabolic disease, frailty, cognitive decline or chronic illness. The real prize is to preserve function for longer and compress the period of ill health to minimal. Food becomes important in that conversation because it is one of the few inter-

The book makes a striking case: data has never simply been about information. It has been a technology of power, used to organise societies, govern populations, build empires and determine who belongs. At a moment when AI, data brokers, surveillance and algorithmic decision-making are transforming everyday life, Data Empire asks an urgent question: what happens when the systems that once helped us remember begin to rule us?

WOMEN GAMERS IN INDIA

India is home to 511 million active gamers, and the number is expected to rise to over 700 million by 2030. What's notable is that female participation has increased from 43% of players in 2023 to 49% in 2026, as per a new report by Niko Partners

KUNAL DOLEY

AT THE UPCOMING Asian Games in Aichi-Nagoya, Japan — scheduled to take place from September 19 to October 4 — esports will be among the 43 sports to be played, and will include 11 medal events of the total 469. Incidentally, this is the second time in the 75-year history of the multi-sport event — the second largest after the Olympic Games — that esports will feature as an official full-medal event. The competitive video gaming genre made its Asian Games debut at the last edition in Hangzhou, China in 2023.

At Hangzhou, medals were awarded in seven esports events — Arena of Valor Asian Games Version, DOTA 2, Dream Three Kingdoms 2, FIFA Online 4, League of Legends, PUBG and Street Fighter V: Champion Edition. While 15 members from India competed in four of those titles, the country's best result came in League of Legends, where the team reached the quarter-finals.

This time, however, the prospects are brighter as India looks to make its mark on one of esports' biggest stages. The number of esports medal events has also increased to 11. "For our contingent, we'll be going up against countries that already have a well-established esports ecosystem. Though they may have the upper hand, we're going to put in double the effort and catch them off guard. We will surprise them with our improvement, as they have no insight into our scene," says Akshaj Shenoy (aka Kat Bot), captain of India's League of Legends team that has already punched its ticket to Aichi-Nagoya. His other team members include Rahul Bisht, Sanidhya Malik, Akash Shandilya, Ahmed Israr and Mihir Rajan.

Bisht (aka Bob) agrees with Shenoy. "The competition is going to be very strong, especially because countries like Korea, China, and other Asian regions have highly developed esports ecosystems. We respect every opponent, but we are not going there just to participate. We are going there to compete," he says.

"Our team has talented players, and with the right preparation and mindset, we can surprise people. Our immediate goal is to perform at our best, take one match at a time, and make sure we represent India with discipline and pride," adds Bisht, who is a computer science engineer from BITS Pilani and has worked for multiple companies.

Incidentally, four of this year's five League of Legends team members, including Shenoy, have played in the last Asiad as well. "Even though we fell short of the main event, the overall experience was positive and enjoyable, as it gave us insight into how other contingents prepare and compete for their respective events, whether physical or electronic," shares Shenoy.

"The tournament had intense competition, and being our first international event at the time, it showed us where we lacked in terms of coordination, preparation, and experience. It gave us the exposure and reality check we needed on what to do differently to close the gap between us and the other teams," he adds.

Gearing up for D-Day

Bisht got into esports the same way many players do, by falling in love with the game first. He started as a casual player, enjoying the game with friends, and slowly shifted towards playing seriously. "I kept grinding ranked games, watching professional matches, learning from better players, and constantly improving. Some of my key achievements include playing at a national and international stage for DOTA in 2018 and League of Legends now," he shares.

Similarly, Shenoy has been playing League of Legends for over 10 years now. "I slowly climbed the ranks and eventually made my own team, which became undefeated in the region while also winning several international events," says the 24-year-old with a background in HR but looking to pursue higher education. "I play the mid lane for the team, and my role is to facilitate through my map presence while also acting as a primary/secondary carry," he adds.

Talking about the team's preparations in the run-up to Asiad, Shenoy says they have had to spend countless hours improving themselves individually while also honing their team skills. "We VOD-review (watching a recorded game or match to find mistakes, fix bad habits, and improve skills) our own games as well as those of our competitors to determine how to prepare and strategise better. We've also been competing in several regional and international tournaments to put our skills to the test, winning most of them," adds Shenoy.

Similarly, Bisht says he spends several hours every day on individual practice, champion pool improvement, and reviewing his own gameplay. "As a team, we practise together regularly, work on strategy, communication, matchups, and review our scrims in detail. The goal is to make sure we are prepared for the level of competition we will face," he adds.

Eventually, Bisht says they will compete and fight for a medal finish. "We want to give our best performance," says Bisht.

"We're going to put everything on the line for this event and give it our best shot for a medal finish," adds Shenoy.

Meanwhile, Mayank Prajapati (aka MiKeYROG), who played in the last Asian Games in the Street Fighter V event, is also positive about Team India's prospects. "I know all the players we currently have and play with them regularly. We have a lot of young talent... Thanks to Capcom (an online regional tournament circuit) and their 'World Warrior' programme, we get to compete against other countries as well, so we have a good chance this time," he says.

Prajapati is a freelance architect and has been playing games since childhood. Commenting on his experience in Hangzhou, he says: "It was one of my best tournament experiences ever. I met so many international players and some of the players I follow in the game. I played many games with them and gained exposure as to how other pro players think."

significant — it comes at a time when the gaming market has already crossed $1 billion in annual revenue and is projected to reach $1.77 billion by 2030, with the player base expected to grow from 511 million in 2025 to over 700 million by 2030, as per a recent report by NIKO Partners.

The development also signals permanence rather than experimentation. "It strengthens the case for esports to be treated as a high-performance discipline, encouraging greater investment from brands, state governments, educational institutions and sports bodies," says Rohit Agarwal, founder and director of Alpha Zegus, a creative marketing agency specialising in gaming and lifestyle.

The Asian Games also create aspirational value. "Every medal opportunity encourages families, academics and sponsors to take esports more seriously. That legitimacy is just as important as the competition itself," adds Agarwal.

The medal event recognition also reinforces that competitive gaming is becoming an established sporting discipline on the global stage, says Gautam Virk, co-founder and CEO of NODWIN Gaming, a company focused on esports, gaming and youth entertainment.

"For India, it validates the aspirations of thousands of young players and gives the entire ecosystem greater confidence to invest in talent, infrastructure and long-term growth," he adds.

For a long time, one of the biggest challenges was changing the perception of gaming from being just a form of entertainment to something that requires skill, discipline, strategy, and years of practice. "Platforms like the Asian Games help accelerate that shift," says Animesh Agarwal, co-founder and CEO of S8UL, an esports and gaming content company.

It also creates a stronger ecosystem around athletes. "When there is a prestigious global platform to compete at, it encourages better training structures, more investment, and greater participation from all stakeholders. This benefits not just players, but also organisations, publishers, tournament operators, brands, and the wider gaming community," adds Agarwal.

On a renewed growth curve

The Indian esports ecosystem has grown tremendously over the past few years. What has changed is that gaming is no longer limited to a small community of players. It has become a larger youth entertainment ecosystem. A major reason behind this growth has been accessibility.

"Affordable smartphones, internet, and better connectivity have made mobile gaming extremely popular across the country. This has helped millions of young Indians discover gaming and esports," says Agarwal of S8UL.

At the same time, the sector has also received greater recognition from institutions, with initiatives like the Promotion and Regulation of Online Gaming Act (PROGA), 2025 helping provide more clarity around esports as a legitimate multi-sport discipline while distinguishing it from online money games.

"Creators have also played a huge role in making gaming mainstream. They have built large communities around gaming content, introduced new audiences to esports, and helped change the perception of gaming from just a hobby to a form of entertainment and a potential career," says Agarwal.

Another major shift has been the increasing involvement of brands and sponsors. Companies that were traditionally outside gaming are now recognising the value of this audience. "We are seeing brands enter through team partnerships, tournament sponsorships, and creator collaborations."

"For our Esports World Cup 2026 campaign, Campa Energy has joined us as the title sponsor, while AMD has partnered with us to support our competitive and content initiatives. Beyond this, we are also seeing several non-endemic brands and mainstream sports entities collaborate with esports tournaments, teams, athletes, and creators, which shows how much the industry has evolved," adds Agarwal.

The FICCI-EY Media & Entertainment Industry Report 2026 highlights the growing scale and maturity of India's esports ecosystem. In 2025, nearly 2.85 million players participated in esports in India, with 41 professional teams, 23 active esports titles, over 9,500 hours of tournament broadcasts, and participation from 75 brands. "The ecosystem is also becoming increasingly global, with international team participation nearly doubling over the last year. That scale is creating larger competitive communities, stronger tournament participation, higher viewership, and growing interest from publishers and brands," says Virk of NODWIN Gaming.

As the ecosystem continues to mature, the focus is shifting from scale to sustainability, creating better opportunities for players, teams, tournament organisers, and the wider industry, he adds.

The road ahead

Indian esports has reached a point where the conversation is less about talent and more about creating the right environment for that talent to thrive. Building an ecosystem that can consistently support players as they progress to the highest level is the focus point now. "That includes stronger infrastructure, easier access to international competition, and addressing practical hurdles like visas and travel that often affect teams competing overseas," says Virk of NODWIN Gaming.

India has immense talent, but Agarwal of S8UL feels we need systems that allow players to progress from grassroots levels to becoming professional athletes. "In traditional sports, there is a clear pathway through school-level competitions, districts, states, nationals, and leagues like Ranji Trophy in cricket. Esports needs similar structures where aspiring players know how to enter the ecosystem, develop their skills, and eventually reach the highest level," he adds.

Another challenge, according to Agarwal, is access to international competition. "Players often face difficulties around travel and visa processes, which can impact their ability to participate in global tournaments. For athletes to improve, they need consistent exposure to international competition, and removing these barriers will be important," he adds.

Even though the situation has improved for some esports titles, especially mobile ones, the same can't be said for others, says gamer Shenoy.

"Lack of infrastructure, government support, job security, awareness, and a well-established ecosystem still exists for most titles. The boom of the mobile gaming industry is understandable, but the hype needs to extend to the entire ecosystem," he explains.

According to Shenoy, the government also heavily taxes these underdeveloped titles as a result of the massive success of a few games, which makes having a career in these titles challenging. "However, India is on the right track, and hopefully, in the near future, esports will be recognised as a whole," he adds.

The Aichi-Nagoya Games is already leading us in that direction.

One of the biggest challenges was changing the perception of gaming... Platforms like Asian Games are helping accelerate that shift

The condiment racks especially are extensive and endless; I go in with a list of condiments to replenish, and exit with the ingredients of a different exotic preparation altogether. Racks of Indian style chutneys and spice powders will be arranged right next to Korean fire sauce and gochujang paste. The traditional Bengali mustard, kasundi, can be found stacked next to a bog-gling array of American style sweet mustard squeeze bottles. Let me not get started on vinegars. The common white variety I have seen all my childhood is difficult to find amid apple cider, balsamic, red and white wine, rice, malt, champagne, sherry, black, coconut, cane, beer, or even pineapple and sour cherry vinegar. Phew!

The truth is that my craving has changed five times in a span of ten minutes, and by the end of it, my palate is legitimately confused. Spoilt for choice is one way to look at it, and perhaps the most flattering too. From hummus, wasabi, varieties of chilli sauces, and flavoured cheese spreads, to mango chutneys, ginger and garlic pastes, nacho dips and barbecue and peri peri spice powders, among others — a packaged version of it is surely available in a tube or jar. The globalisation of the grocery list can be both a boon and a bane.

Worse still, as it has happened on several occasions, when I step into the store to purchase ingredients for a simple red sauce pasta, I end up leaving the store wondering why I have lost my appetite altogether. The selection of the tastes and flavours I have at my disposal to sample is entirely too vast. Spreads, sauces and condiments line my kitchen shelves like the pantry of a MasterChef kitchen. Do many of them expire after being used just once or twice? Definitely.

I am not alone. As per an IMARC report, young urban shoppers are looking for exotic, strong flavours to add variety to their food. Data reveals that 44% of Indians like flavours influenced by global cuisines, while 35% consistently seek out new foods and flavours to sample. Exclusive flavours also contribute significantly, as 40% of Indians are interested in sampling them. As a result, Indian condiment companies, including Nestle, Hindustan Unilever, Weikfeild, Veeba, Craft Heinz and Capital Foods, among others, are launching new products by the day that marry traditional Indian spices with global tastes.

A report by Research and Markets found that urban life also encourages the use of time-saving food options, boosting demand for convenient condiments like ready-to-eat chutneys and cooking pastes. These products resonate particularly with nuclear families and working professionals who prioritise taste and convenience, the report said.

The idea is to speed past the prepping, chopping, blending and grinding process, and add everything straight into one pan — cover it, stir it, and consume it. It needs to be quick and delicious. Such is the expansion of the condiments market, the varieties offered and the demand for them that the choice of what to cook frequently turns out to be a more involved and complicated process than the cooking itself. My problem now, consequently, has gone from “what do I have the time to make today”, to “what flavours do I choose today?”

The purple rush

KUNAL DOLEY

JAMUN'S GETTING A premium upgrade. The humble Indian fruit, commonly associated with roadside vendors during summer and monsoon months and celebrated for its distinct sweet-and-tangy flavour and rich purple hue, is finding its way into beverages and culinary innovations.

● Cheers to desi

The alco-bev industry is adapting the Indian fruit in more ways than one. Diageo India's Smirnoff launched vodka variant called 'Minty Jamun' in July last year. It was followed by Radico Khaitan's Magic Moments Jamun SpicyMint in September. “For years there was this unspoken rule that premium meant imported, that if a flavour didn't sound European or exotic it couldn't sit on a prestige shelf. That rule is dying,” says Ashutosh Rajput, COO of Alcobrew Distilleries, an Indian liquor company that recently launched One More Next Twisty Minty Jamun, a new flavour in its vodka range. “Jamun works as a spirit's flavour for very practical reasons. It has a natural tartness that behaves well with alcohol; it's seasonal and nostalgic in a way that creates instant emotional recall, and nobody has to be taught what it tastes like,” adds Rajput.

The shift reflects growing consumer confidence in Indian flavours and ingredients, says Varun Jain, CEO & founder of Smoke Lab, NV Group, which recently added Blue Moon Minty Jamun flavoured vodka to its portfolio. “The opportunity for the spirits industry is to take familiar regional ingredients and reinterpret them in contemporary formats. It is less about simply making a product ‘desi’ and more about giving Indian flavours a modern, premium context.” Some other jamuni liquor available in the market include V21 Jamun, which brings a familiar Indian favourite to vodka, and Samsara Enchanted Jamun & Pink Salt, a craft Indian gin that mixes juicy fruit with a touch of Himalayan pink, and Jamun The Himalayan Juniper Dry Gin, an artisanal craft gin produced by the Mohan Meakin distillery.

● Nostalgia in a glass

Jamun is now Indian-ising cocktails, mocktails and shakes. MONIN India's Spiced Jamun Syrup — the French company's first-ever desi flavour — for instance, reimagines a nostalgic Indian flavour in a contemporary format. Similarly, Raid & Run by Bartisans, a cocktail and mocktail mixer, blends childhood memories of eating jamun with a hint of savoury jeera. For a cocktail lover, Oxymorons, a premium cocktail bar in Hyderabad, is a go-to place to get the purple rush. Its ‘Jamun Yuzu Gin & Tonic’ is “a gin & tonic gone rogue”, as per founder Rehan Guha. “Jamun and yuzu are blended straight into a rustic and unstrained purée, topped with tonic for a tart and citrusy sip.”

● Cool comfort

Another F&B space that is celebrating jamun is ice cream. Artisanal brand Naturals offers a ‘kala jamun’ variant, so does NIC Ice Creams. Kwaliti Wall's Slow Churn Jamun ice cream has a rich, velvety texture with a sweet-and-tart flavour profile enhanced by a hint of black salt and spices.

● INTERVIEW: DILHAN C FERNANDO, CHAIRMAN, DILMAH

‘Notion of fine tea remains untapped in south Asia’

MITALI

India’s premium hospitality boom and a younger generation’s appetite for provenance, wellness and flavour discovery are creating a new opportunity for fine tea. Dilhan C Fernando, chairman of Dilmah, believes India could become an important market for premium tea — not by replacing its established tea traditions, but by expanding them. As the Sri Lankan beverage company launches its India-exclusive Thambapanni Luxury Collection, Fernando talks about premiumisation, tea gastronomy, climate change, sustainability, family ownership and why tea may finally be ready for its own speciality moment. Edited excerpts:

Dilmah is renewing its focus on India with the launch of Thambapanni. What has changed in the Indian tea market that makes this the right time for a stronger push?

For tea in India, the time is now. India now has a luxury hospitality sector vibrant enough to hold a serious tea programme, with an estimated 1 billion+ potential guests in the luxury and premium segment. Premium hotels and innovative hospitality and culinary concepts are growing.

The notion of fine tea remains largely untapped. Guests are seeking experiential dining, authentic flavour discovery, wellness and conscious consumption. The sophistication of the premium Indian guest has changed unrecognisably. The same instinct that made single-estate coffee, small-batch spirits and regional cuisine significant creates an opportunity for fine teas.

Thambapanni is Indian. The teas are made in India, for India, from Indian gardens and Indian spice, with two exceptions — our Nuwara Eliya pekoe and Ceylon Souchong. The current definition of premium begins at around ₹600 per kilo and our aspiration is to go significantly beyond in terms of quality and value. However, India’s branded tea cafés already number over 1,200, growing at an estimated 25% per annum. The opportunity appears small only because it hasn’t been addressed. We are not pursuing a market opportunity but aiming to create one. Our ambition is modest. Having 50-60 luxury hospitality properties, done properly, would be a considerable achievement in the first two years.

Thambapanni is being created exclusively for India. What influenced it?

Our Thambapanni Luxury Collection has no equivalent in India. We worked with 26 artisanal suppliers of fine tea, spices and herbs to craft a collection of taste experiences. It includes pure and single region teas such as Wild Assam Reserve, as well as Cinnamon Velvet Gourmet Tea, combining Assam tea with Ceylon Cinnamon and natural vanilla extract. Maharaja Chai combines real cardamom and ginger grown in India with Ceylon cinnamon and other spices. Each tea is a palette of experiences designed around occasions and moods, with possibilities to elevate food through pairings and add depth to NOLO (non-alcoholic and low ABV) drinks. Dilmah Tea Inspired initiative — Tea Gastronomy and Tea Mixology — began in 1998, evolving through the work of our Dilmah School of Tea, which we established in 2008 to help hospitality operators understand the potential in tea. It has been a long and arduous journey, and it may be no different in India, although the environment is perfect for this evolution of fine tea. For artisans who produce exceptional teas, herbs, and spices too often without an opportunity to add value to their produce, it is also very necessary.

India is one of the world’s largest tea producers and consumers. How do you position Ceylon tea against Darjeeling, Assam and Nilgiri?

I don’t believe the consumer we are engaging in India sees tea as a generic product where Sri Lanka competes against India. They have a more sophisticated expectation where Gyokuro from Japan sits alongside Nuwara Eliya, Nilgiri, Assam and Darjeeling.

Each terroir has its potential. Darjeeling makes teas that Sri Lanka, Taiwan and Rwanda cannot make. Assam has a strength and signature malt note, while Nilgiri, at its best, is one of the most underrated teas in the world.

What Ceylon offers is diversity from an island where sunshine, wind, rainfall and soils create dramatic differences in Uva, Dimbula and Nuwara Eliya teas.

Can tea build a lifestyle ecosystem among youngsters, similar to coffee?

There appears to be a universal preference among younger consumers for natural wellness, preventive health through food and beverage, flavour discovery through authenticity and conscious consumption. Tea has the potential to deliver each of these in abundance.

Tea has more to work with than coffee or wine: natural diversity, deep heritage, a genuine wellness proposition supported by clinical research, and it is the only daily ritual that is also social. The young Indian consumer is on our side. They want flavour adventure, natural wellness and to know where things come from and who made them. It is not that tea cannot do what coffee did. It is that tea has to stop undermining itself first.

What are the biggest risks for the tea business over the next decade?

The climate emergency comes to mind first. Our prized Uva Seasonal Flush depends on a dry, desiccating wind that is less reliable than it was. When the season fails, there is no version of the tea to sell. You cannot manufacture terroir in Uva, Nuwara Eliya or elsewhere. But I would put a different risk first: price and value have become entirely disconnected. For four decades the industry has been paid on price and asked to deliver value, and that does not work for India or Sri Lanka. Connecting value with price — achieving a genuinely fair and sustainable price for growers — is critical for the future of Indian tea, as much as it is for Ceylon tea and coffee.

How much does sustainability add to the cost of producing premium tea? Are consumers willing to pay more?

Consumers are prepared to pay a premium for genuinely sustainable, ethical, authentic teas that deliver taste, adventure and goodness. Tea is an affordable luxury. It has sophistication, heritage and diversity connected to nature. Genuinely ethical, sustainable and luxurious teas may cost 40%-50% more than ordinary equivalents. The challenge in retail is the margin structure, where retailers make disproportionate margins, adding trading terms and promotions to the producers’ dwindling share. Consumers will pay for sustainability, but that needs to be verified in fact.

Dilmah has remained family-owned while becoming a global brand. What are the advantages and challenges?

The challenges are many, but they are balanced by the advantages. Most important for us is my father’s legacy. In 1950, he set out to make the world a better place, aligning his passion for tea with his refusal to accept indifference towards tea growers and their families.

Today, the work of our MJF Charitable Foundation and Dilmah Conservation uses a minimum of 15% of our pre-tax profits for humanitarian and environmental impact work.

Maintaining that philosophy is a challenge, although we can never compromise on the topic of compromise.

Do you believe tea is now entering its own ‘speciality’ moment?

Tea is unquestionably having a speciality moment. For decades, my father, brother and I travelled the world trying to convince customers that fine tea was worth paying a few cents per cup extra for. We failed more times than we succeeded. Consumers who value authenticity, quality, wellness, ethics and sustainability are changing that environment. What we need to be cautious of is the start-up, get-rich-quick mentality, which will see many brands with more style than substance emerge.

What does the perfect cup of tea mean to you personally?

I drink 12 to 15 cups of tea every day and brew my own tea. The perfect cup is also about companionship. Taking tea with friends and family, personalising it with a preferred garnish and pairing it with fine food are all dimensions of the perfect cup. Tea is a wonderful companion, always encouraging thought and contemplation but also inviting conversation and friendship.

A RARE ASSAM TEA

A rare tea, grown in eastern Assam’s Dibrugarh district, fetched a record price of ₹1.15 lakh per kg at a private auction in 2022. Leaves of the Manohari gold tea are picked in the early morning (4-6 am) to prevent the sun from altering its distinct aroma and flavour

When bars meet blackboards

Move over classrooms, academic lectures are now being held in bars & cafés — a reflection of Gen Z’s growing appetite for intellectual engagement outside formal institutions

SREYA DEB

GONE ARE THE days when bars were only thought of as places where you could go for a drink after a hard day’s work. Now, you can head into a watering hole on the weekend, and even indulge in an academic lecture on particle physics, the lives of bats, in-depth journalism, AI in politics, history of numismatics, or anything that might catch your fancy.

In such settings, loud music and inebriated exchanges are not the loudest thing in the room — the mic of the lecturer or the subject matter expert, always decorated with multiple degrees and qualifications, and the questions of the audience, take over the space.

Leading this trend in India are organisers like UnLecture, Pint of View and Society of Intellectuals. They hold such events largely in cities such as Delhi, Mumbai, Bengaluru and Hyderabad in restaurants and bars like The Piano Man Jazz Club, Depot48, and Social.

In the US, popularising this movement is Lectures on Tap, an event series that runs mostly in pubs where lecturers and academics come in to enjoy talks and PowerPoint presentations on pedagogical subjects. Another noted lecture community is Pint of View (PoV), which has found its way to India as well.

Ayushi Misra and Anmol Grace, curators of PoV’s Delhi chapter, emphasise that the venue itself is central to the concept. Grace argues that bars remove the intimidation associated with academic settings, encouraging audiences to ask questions and engage more freely with speakers.

“We started small, tested the idea and let the audience tell us. The response made it clear that there was a real appetite for lectures outside traditional academic spaces,” adds Misra.

Similarly, Society of Intellectuals (SoI) emerged from a desire to create spaces where “knowledge itself is the celebrity”, encouraging meaningful conversations in an era dominated by digital distractions. Muskan Bhalla, founder of the community that is now operational in Mumbai and Pune, says: “I wanted to create a community because there was a gap... even right now, we don’t have good avenues to gain good knowledge.” In their events, they have covered subjects such as film criticism, storytelling, entomology, psychology and science.

Bhalla says that the primary aim of SoI is to make these subjects more accessible. “We encourage our lecturers to avoid using too much technical jargon, use mass communication aids like flowcharts, animations, anecdotal aids and so on.” Additionally, rather than oversimplifying the matter, the goal is to make specialist knowledge enjoyable for wider audiences. This is what Keya Seth, a 32-year-old graphic designer, felt. Even though she attended a lecture on particle physics simply on a whim, as she “was looking for an out-of-the-box experience, and randomly came across the event on social media”, the talk turned out to be “not only informative, but also interesting for those coming from different professional backgrounds”.

“You tend to judge the potential of the lecture less by the subject matter beforehand, and the bar setting is already a factor that works in its favour,” she adds.

Mishka Lepps, co-founder of UnLecture, agrees. She says that taking learning into informal settings makes people feel more comfortable and “removes the inhibitions often associated with formal classrooms”. UnLecture combines expert talks with interactive discussions, audience participation and informal conversations over food and drinks. The initiative is seeing its fair share of success across Delhi-NCR.

The founders have called UnLecture an experiment to attempt to disrupt the traditional lecture format by testing it in spaces where people naturally gather to socialise, helping build communities centred on curiosity and conversation. The experiment, it seems, is already working.

STORIES AND TRENDS FROM INDIA AND AROUND THE WORLD THAT CAUGHT OUR FANCY

Filmmaker Jon Favreau with Grogu at the premiere of Star Wars: The Mandalorian and Grogu; Star Trek: Strange New Worlds features puppets (bottom)

Back to BASICS

How filmmakers are returning to puppets, animatronics & practical creatures to make movies feel ‘real’ again

VAISHALI DAR

FOR A WHILE it seemed the future of filmmaking belonged to computers. As computer-generated imagery (CGI) improved, filmmakers had less need for real creatures, sets and puppets. Digital technology could create almost anything and change it whenever they wanted.

But now, filmmakers are once again reaching for things they can touch. The revival shows up in some of the biggest franchises in popular culture.

Star Wars, for instance, understood the power of physical creatures a long time ago. Yoda began life as a puppet, operated by Frank Oz, in The Empire Strikes Back. Later versions of the character were created using CGI. More recently, Grogu was brought to life using an elaborate practical puppet, with digital effects adding to what the character can do, in The Mandalorian. CGI, then, has not replaced puppetry. It has given new possibilities.

The same idea appears in Star Trek: Strange New Worlds. In its recent puppet-focused episode, Level-Five Transporter Accident, the Enterprise crew is turned into puppets, with Jim Henson's Creature Shop helping create the characters. Instead of hiding the limits of puppetry, the show makes them part of the fun.

And that is what makes a puppet different from a digital character. A CGI character can move in almost any way. A puppet has limits. Performers have to work with those limits and react to something that is physically in front of them. The result may not look perfectly polished, but it can feel more alive.

This approach has been used quite a lot in the past. Steven Spielberg's Jurassic Park is one of the best-known examples where the dinosaurs were not entirely computer-generated. American television and film special make-up effects artist Stan Winston, best known for his work on the Terminator franchise, the Jurassic Park trilogy, Aliens, The Thing, the first two installments of the Predator franchise, Inspector Gadget, Iron Man and Edward Scissorhands, built huge practical creatures, including the famous T rex. At the same time, Industrial Light & Magic, an American motion picture visual effects, computer animation and stereo conversion digital studio founded by George Lucas, used CGI for shots that could not be achieved with physical models. The actors could see and react to something that was actually there. That combination of practical effects and digital technology has become an important part of modern filmmaking.

Guillermo del Toro's Pinocchio took the idea in another direction. The characters were handmade stop-motion puppets, designed so their faces and bodies could be moved frame by frame. Digital effects were also used, but mainly to support the physical world. The finished film retains the texture, detail and imperfections of something made by hand.

Then there is Five Nights at Freddy's, based on the popular video-game series created by Scott Cawthon. The film brought its frightening characters to life as physical animatronic creatures with the help of Jim Henson's Creature Shop. The choice made sense because the characters are closely linked to the strange movements and mechanical appearance of animatronic mascots.

Henson's influence goes further. Films such as The Dark Crystal and Labyrinth showed how puppets could create entire fantasy worlds. Today, Henson continues to work with puppetry, animatronics and digital techniques. The craft has not disappeared because of technology. It has evolved with it. One simple reason why filmmakers continue to use practical creatures is that they give actors something real to look at, touch and react to. They give cinematographers real light, reflections and shadows. Most importantly, they occupy physical space.

This is also relevant today because digital entertainment has become part of everyday life. Now viewers are surrounded by filters, virtual characters, AI-generated images and computer-created worlds. Against this background, something handmade can feel special. A puppet has seams. An animatronic creature has moving parts. A handmade character carries the marks of the people who created and performed it. And those imperfections may be exactly what makes it feel human.

TECH NOW-LOGY

‘Humanising’ AI

Too artificial? Now there are apps to introduce ‘human’ mistakes

SUGANDHA MUKHERJEE

AT FIRST, ONE could tell that the other person was human by asking them to type the correct CAPTCHA or tick all the traffic lights in a 9x9 grid, but today, the internet is a much harder place to find out the truth. As AI-generated text, images, voices and videos flood our social media feeds and agentic AIs are running firms, even something as familiar as a cat batting her eyelids in a video can leave us wondering if that is actually a cat, or a very convincing digital feline.

Take AI writing tools, for instance. Give one a prompt to write an essay on the cow, and you could get a grammatically perfect write-up explaining the origins of bovines to an argument about how veganism could save the planet. The problem is that when millions of such sentences begin circulating online, the patterns become recognisable, making it paradoxically less human. That has created a new category of AI tools designed to make AI sound, look and behave more human. Text is the most obvious. Tools such as WriteHuman and Stealth-

Writer take AI-generated drafts and rewrite them for natural phrasing, rhythm and variation. WriteHuman can also provide sentence-level AI probability analysis, while StealthWriter offers different levels of rewriting and sentence-by-sentence alternatives.

The idea of ‘humanising’ text is increasingly about making machine-generated content more context-aware, with no repetition and more conversational, especially when it comes to agentic AI, where systems have been developed in a manner that can plan and do your work without being prompted constantly. Frameworks such as CrewAI allow developers to give agents distinct roles, while LangGraph supports workflows in which an agent can pause and bring a human into the loop. Microsoft's Copilot Studio similarly allows organisations to customise how conversational agents respond and behave. They aim to make an AI agent more like a colleague who knows when to ask for follow-ups and when to act according to the given work.

Then there is the voice aspect of content. In 2026, text-to-speech has moved well beyond the robotic narration once associated with automated phone calls (even spam calls). For example, software company ElevenLabs generates speech with control over voice tone, pace and emotional delivery, while its voice library offers thousands of expressive voices. OpenAI's voice systems are similarly designed around more natural, expressive interaction.

Hume AI takes the idea further with its Empathic Voice Interface. It analyses cues such as the rhythm, pitch and tone of a user's speech and can alter its response accordingly, becoming more apologetic when it detects frustration or more sympathetic in response to sadness. The company calls them ‘emotionally intelligent’ models. It is designed to make the media behave more like a chat between two people, including all the “umm” and “yeah, right”. Still, this is one aspect of humanising audio, as tools can also make imperfect recordings sound professionally ‘human’. For instance, Adobe Podcast's Enhance Speech uses AI to clean up voice recordings and reduce unwanted background noise, making an imperfect human recording sound as though it came from a soundproof studio. Video is where the distinction becomes even harder to spot, specifically even harder for generations before us who rely on WhatsApp forwards for information. LA-based AI company HeyGen can turn a script into a talking avatar with synchronised lip movements and expressions, while its video localisation tools translate existing videos into multiple languages while preserving the speaker's voice, expressions and lip movements. “Character consistency is what separates a truly useful avatar from a mere gimmick. AvatarV delivers this across every angle, expression, and video you create,” the company says on website. It is built on a five-stage AI training pipeline that captures how you move, gesture, and express yourself.

The AI-human contest is becoming a two-way game. Recently, online publishing site Substack started letting readers scan posts, notes, comments and replies published from July 21, using Pangram, an AI text and image detector, to estimate how much text was human-written or AI-assisted. The result is a growing tech layer on both sides: tools that make AI content more human-like and tools that try to determine how much real human thought went into it.

When animals pay the price

SREYA DEB

AN INNOCUOUS SOCIAL media post of actor Vikram with a lar gibbon may have snowballed into a full-blown wildlife controversy, but the case has also put the spotlight back on the murky yet growing world of the exotic pet trade in India.

A recent report released by global animal protection and anti-cruelty NGO Humane World for Animals, titled Safeguarding Biodiversity and Public Health: A Policy Analysis of Exotic Pet Trade in India, says the country's exotic pet trade has moved well beyond a niche hobby. The demand for non-native wildlife as pets has especially increased over the past decade, driven by their perceived social status value, rising urban affluence and rapid expansion of online marketplaces.

A voluntary disclosure scheme introduced by the government in 2020 indicates the scale of the issue. As per the scheme, by February 2021, more than 40,000 people across 30 states and Union territories had declared possession of exotic animals, even though the Humane World for Animals report says the figure likely captures only a fraction of the real number.

India's obsession with exotic pets is growing, but enforcement has not kept pace

Valued at about $42.6 million in 2024, the exotic pet trade is projected to reach $75.8 million by 2030, growing at an annual rate of 10.2%. Reptiles and birds remain particularly popular, with species such as green iguanas, royal ball pythons, African grey parrots and blue-and-gold macaws being the most common in the market.

The market is now expanding to mammals and invertebrates too. Ownership of these animals is often a matter of status driven by urban affluence, not to mention the visual appeal of unusual animals on social media.

The catch is that “exotic” does not automatically mean “illegal”. That legal position, however, changed significantly after the Wild Life (Protection) Amendment Act, 2022 brought some 37,000 species listed under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Flora and Fauna (CITES), an international treaty adopted in 1973, into Schedule IV of the law, which lists protected species.

Under the provisions, owners must report possession, as well as transfers, births and deaths of registered animals. The Living Animal Species (Reporting and Registration) Rules, 2024 subsequently established the registration mechanism through India's PARIVESH portal, a single-window portal for clearances on animals and plants.

However, enforcement has historically proven difficult. Leading conservation organisation WWF-India documented 56 seizures involving roughly 4,000 exotic animals in 2022 alone. A Trade Records Analysis of Flora and Fauna in Commerce (TRAFFIC) analysis of global seizures between January 2022 and May 2025 found 60 incidents involving live animals smuggled through passenger baggage between Thailand and India, representing at least 87 species and 7,272 individual animals, including critically endangered species.

In India, movement through airports also sheds some light on the scale of the problem. In February, Chennai customs officials reportedly intercepted 31 exotic creatures arriving from Bangkok, including tortoises, iguanas, ball pythons and skinks. Some had been concealed inside a speaker box with inadequate ventilation, and two animals died in the process as well.

The digital marketplace is another growing concern. Social media and online platforms can connect sellers and buyers discreetly, making wildlife transactions harder to monitor. Experts call for stronger oversight of digital wildlife sales and, crucially, a national regulatory framework specifically addressing exotic pet ownership.

Unfortunately, the real cost is faced by the animals. Being transported through multiple countries, they can face prolonged stress, poor hygiene and inadequate care, creating opportunities for disease transmission. Researchers warn that India also lacks comprehensive post-import disease surveillance for exotic species. Venomous reptiles pose an additional emergency risk, according to the report: recent seizures have included species for which suitable antivenom may not be available in India.

Wildlife activists reiterate that unique and particularly endangered animals are not lifestyle accessories. Rather, their paperwork, provenance, welfare and ecological footprints matter. India's exotic pet market may be booming, but regulators are increasingly asking what, exactly, is being bought, and where it came from.

CHRONIC NECK AND lower back pain is no longer an age-related issue - young adults are increasingly reporting consistently worsening aches over months of neglecting them as muscle soreness. Health experts say the shift has accelerated in the post-pandemic era, driven by work-from-home lifestyles, prolonged screen time, poor posture and declining physical activity. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), lower back pain is the leading cause of disability worldwide. In 2025, over 450 million working age adults were suffering from back pain, with cases projected to rise to 843 million by 2050. The Global Burden of Disease study also identifies lower back pain as one of the leading contributors to years lived with disability across age groups. Experts warn that ignoring persistent pain can allow relatively minor musculoskeletal problems to develop into chronic conditions.

Early onset

Today's lifestyle is at the heart of the growing burden of neck and back pain among young adults, experts say. "There has been a noticeable rise in young adults seeking consultation for neck and back pain over the past few years," says Dr Ashish Yadav, attending consultant, physical medicine and rehabilitation, Medanta, Noida. "Musculoskeletal pain, once considered primarily an older-age concern, is now frequently seen in people in their 20s and 30s. This shift appears to be driven by prolonged screen time, sedentary work routines, poor posture, reduced physical activity and rising stress levels."

Echoing this, Dr Surender Pal Singh, head of physiotherapy at CK Birla Hospital, Delhi, says, "The occurrence of neck and back pain in individuals aged 18-35 years shows an increasing trend in recent years. The increase is mostly due to sedentary behaviour, incorrect posture and increased gadget usage."

"Nutritional deficiencies (like vitamin D and vitamin B12) and, in some cases, autoimmune diseases, infections, or degenerative changes in the spine may provoke symptoms of musculoskeletal problems," says Dr Pal, adding, "Symptoms usually start as a feeling of slight discomfort and worsen with time if the underlying causes remain ignored."

According to Dr Vaibhav Bagaria, director, orthopaedics and joint replacement, Sir HN Reliance Hospitals, Mumbai, the problem extends beyond office work. "Long screen time, sitting for hours, work-from-home setups, less exercise, gym injuries, stress and poor sleep are all adding to it. Earlier this was seen more after 40; now even people in their 20s and sometimes schoolchildren are also coming with recurrent neck pain."

Doctors also point to obesity, repetitive strain, improper lifting techniques, weak core muscles, nutritional deficiencies such as vitamin D and B12 deficiency, smoking, poor sleep and psychological stress as important contributors. While most cases are mechanical in nature, inflammatory disorders, congenital abnormalities and infections remain less common but important causes that require medical evaluation. Dr Bagaria adds, "Now even school kids are coming with recurrent neck pain."

Signs & symptoms

The earliest warning signs of neck and back pain are often dismissed as temporary discomfort, say doctors. The most common presentation is mechanical or posture-related pain involving muscles, ligaments or joints rather than serious spinal disease. Dr Yadav notes that myofascial pain affecting the upper back and the area between the shoulder blades has become particularly common. "Trigger points and taut bands in muscles cause dull aching pain which gets aggravated in certain positions," he says.

Equally important, he says, is recognising that chronic pain extends beyond physical symptoms. "Chronicity reflects in sleep and mood disturbance," he explains, emphasising that pain should be addressed through biological, psychological and social aspects rather than as a purely physical complaint.

Dr Pramod Sudarshan, spine surgeon at Apollo Hospitals, Bengaluru, red-flags several symptoms that require urgent evaluation, including fever, unexplained weight loss, night pain, imbalance while walking, bowel or bladder dysfunction, groin numbness and severe limb weakness.

According to Dr Singh, chronic pain lasting more than two to three weeks "should not be disregarded", particularly if accompanied by pain radiating into the arms or legs, numbness, tingling, muscle weakness or dizziness. Dr Bagaria advises that one should seek medical attention if "pain keeps coming back, lasts more than two to three weeks, disturbs sleep or affects routine life". Pain radiating into the limbs, weakness or numbness should never be ignored, he adds.

Courses of treatment

Treatment begins with identifying the underlying cause and combining symptom relief with long-term rehabilitation, says Dr Yadav. "For most cases of mechanical neck or back pain, a combination of activity modification, ergonomic correction, supervised physiotherapy, posture training and targeted strengthening exercises form the foundation of care," he says, adding that patients are encouraged to stay active rather than remain on prolonged bed rest, since movement generally aids recovery.

Dr Sudarshan says patients with posture-related pain often recover with short-term medication, activity modification and physiotherapy. "Once the acute pain settles, physiotherapy and exercise become important. The focus then shifts to strengthening the core and back muscles, correcting posture and preventing recurrence."

Long-term use of painkillers, analgesics or steroids is generally not recommended, he adds. "Painkillers are usually advised only for a short period, especially during acute severe pain. If pain does not settle with initial treatment and investigations do not show a major problem requiring surgery or other intervention, targeted pain-management procedures may be considered in selected cases. These may include local injections at the identified pain-generating area to provide relief."

Medication is usually prescribed only during acute flare-ups to reduce pain and inflammation, allowing patients to participate in rehabilitation. Other treatments include heat therapy, and muscle relaxants for less severe pain.

"Most young patients do not need surgery," says Dr Bagaria. "We advise them to remain active, correct posture, improve workstation ergonomics and start guided stretching and strengthening. Bed rest for many days generally makes things worse." As he puts it, "Only taking painkillers is like putting tape on a leaking pipe."

Neglected pain may eventually lead

TECH NECK

In most cases, tech neck comes from irritated muscles rather than bones or joints. Prolonged screen use without proper ergonomic setup forces neck and shoulders muscles to stay engaged longer than they're meant to

COMMON CAUSES

- Bad posture
- Long periods of sitting
- Lack of exercise
- Overweight
- Muscle weakness
- Improper exercise techniques, sudden muscular overload, and sports injury
- Nutritional deficiencies (like vitamin D and vitamin B12)
- In some cases, autoimmune diseases, infections, or degenerative changes in the spine

RED FLAGS

- Pain lasting longer than three months
- Recurring episodes of discomfort
- Stiffness that limits movement
- Muscle spasms
- Pain that worsens with prolonged sitting or standing
- Some patients also experience pain radiating into the shoulders, arms, buttocks, or legs, along with numbness, tingling, or weakness

Lacto-veg diet for diabetic women

A recent study from India, published in the journal Nutrition and Diabetes, found that a lacto-vegetarian diet combined with 14-hour time-restricted eating (TRE) significantly improved metabolic outcomes in women with type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM), compared with usual diabetes care.

Smart cancer drug to replace chemotherapy

A new "smart" cancer drug developed under the Department of Science and Technology (GoI) designed to switch on and work only inside cancer cells can replace traditional chemotherapy. The drug called RK-251. RK-251 is designed to activate primarily in cancer cells and does not harm healthy cells.

High BMI poses risk to arthritis treatment

A patient data meta-analysis has revealed that higher BMI significantly reduces the effectiveness of JAK inhibitors (a targeted prescription pill that reduces joint pain and inflammation) in rheumatoid arthritis, with obesity acting as a true modifier of treatment response.

Painkillers' effect on kidneys under scanner

A panel under the Department of Health and Family Welfare has asked the union Health Ministry to review existing rules or awareness measures relating to the availability of over the counter medicines that can harm the kidneys. Prolonged self-medication of some painkillers can affect kidney function.

WOMEN ARE INCREASINGLY taking to freezing their eggs, as decisions around childbirth are being taken isolated from traditional societal norms, and more in tune with a woman's personal choices. We ask a medical expert how safe is freezing of eggs. Dr Hitesha Ramnani Rohira, consultant, IVF, Kokilaben Dhirubhai Ambani Hospital, Mumbai, says: "Egg freezing is generally considered safe when performed in an experienced fertility centre, under the guidance of reproductive physician. The minor risks involved with the procedure are mild bloating,

Preserving fertility

Know the dos and dont's of freezing eggs mood swings, minor cramps after retrieval. Rare side effects like ovarian hyperstimulation syndrome, bleeding or minor infection during oocyte retrieval could present themselves. The freezing process itself is well-established, especially with vitrification. Importantly, freezing eggs does not guarantee a pregnancy or healthy baby after thawing and fertilisation in vitro and transfer."

What should one be cautious about regarding the facility and doctor?

When considering egg freezing, choose a properly registered fertility centre with an experienced reproductive physician and a strong embryology laboratory. Ask for clinic-specific results on egg survival after thawing, fertilisation, embryo development and live birth, ideally broken down by age. Also check storage security, backup systems, costs, consent arrangements and what happens if the clinic closes.

How long can a frozen egg be viable?

Frozen eggs do not have a fixed biological expiry date when stored correctly. Evidence indicates that prolonged storage itself does not appear to reduce egg survival or pregnancy rates, although research on extremely long storage periods remains limited. Practical limits depend on the country's regulations, clinic policies, consent and storage fees. Therefore, ask your clinic for its maximum permitted storage period and renewal requirements, and keep your contact details updated.

Can deterioration, genetic damage or reduced viability occur during freezing?

Egg freezing itself is not known to cause genetic damage when modern vitrification and proper storage are used. The bigger genetic concern is age at freezing: older eggs are more likely to have chromosomal abnormalities because of natural reproductive ageing. Current evidence does not show that years in storage themselves increase genetic damage.

Who should consider freezing eggs, and who should not?

Egg freezing may be considered by people who want to preserve reproductive options, particularly those delaying childbearing, unmarried, still unsure about the partner, facing chemotherapy, radiotherapy, ovarian surgery, or conditions that may reduce ovarian function. It may be less suitable when ovarian reserve is low, treatment (aggressive cancers) cannot be delayed, or health conditions make stimulation or retrieval unsafe. Decisions should be individualised.

HOW THE 'NAYI HINDI' USED IN MUSAFIR CAFE ANNOUNCES A NEW GRAMMAR OF STORYTELLING

The new lingo of literature

■ ASHWANI KUMAR

Nobody saw this coming. Musafir Cafe's Netflix adaptation has done what literary purists may once have considered impossible. It has transformed a seemingly modest work of popular fiction into a cultural phenomenon. At a time of profound social and political churn, with Gen Z finding its voice on the streets and online, Musafir Cafe has unexpectedly captured the imagination of contemporary India.

What explains the sensational success of Divya Prakash Dubey's shape-shifting novel which blurs the boundaries between literature and conversation? Can a novel that breaks the conventions of 'serious' fiction speak more powerfully to its time? Does its appeal lie in its unconventional three-way story of love, desire and intimacy? Is it true that love itself is a form of storytelling, one that rarely offers closure? For Divya Prakash, storytelling is not a high-brow literary exercise but a means of confronting madness—an act of emotional survival.

Originally published in 2016 and now in its eleventh edition, it has moved from the shelves of popular fiction to what might almost be called a celluloid miracle. There is something unusual, almost surreal, in the way Musafir Cafe blurs the boundary between story and life, with almost iconoclastic confidence. Neither Premchand's Godan, Agyeeya's Shekhar: Ek Jeevani, nor Dharamvir Bharati's Gunahon Ka Devta despite the unmistakable shadow of Chander and Sudha over its protagonists prepared us for its radically contemporary narrative form. Not even Geetanjali Shree's Booker winning novel Ret Samadhi quite anticipated its subversive emotional energy.

In this sense, Musafir Cafe's journey from page to screen is also a startling journey from popular literature to platform culture. The novel's Nayi Hindi, a lyrical mix of everyday speech and Hinglish, is particularly suited to a generation accustomed to consuming stories across books, screens, clips, conversations and social media. It's hybrid, episodic chapter titles announce a dazzling algorithmic, conversational and lived-in grammar of storytelling.

This was already a literature unusually close to the habits and rhythms of upwardly mobile small-town popular culture. Netflix did not create this accessibility. It simply amplified it for a digital generation for whom love is part therapy, part reel and part memory tag. Whether this is a passing fad or the beginning of a more lasting shift, Musafir Cafe marks a crossover experience in which the language of popular literature, digital culture and streaming entertainment converge to create a new, distinctly contemporary storytelling experience.

What follows is not a rejection of the quintessential Hindi novel but a radical reimagining of its possibilities. Divya inherits its traditions and mischievously unsettles its linear, epic-like architecture, creating a restless, irreverential form that unlocks worlds of love and longing through the most trivial of everyday life. There is no grand historical sweep, no familiar political or ideological battles, and none of the toxic city or obsessive passion that so often drives conventional love stories.

The audacity of Musafir Cafe lies in the fact that it removes love, sex and marriage from the morally policed register in which conventional romance has often placed them. Sudha can joke that "mazaak to banda pyaar mein padte hi ban jaata hai," (the moment you fall in love, you become a joke anyway), while the novel imagines marriage as meaningful only when it ceases to function as a compulsory proof of intimacy. This critique reaches its sharpest, almost aphoristic form in the dialogue between Sudha and Chander: "India ka problem hi yahi hai... ki hum shaadi ko double bed aur double bed ko shaadi samajh lete hain." (That we mistake marriage for a double bed, and a double bed for marriage)

The line instantly dismantles the patriarchy in which marriage is assumed to automatically authorise sex, while sexual intimacy is assumed to demand marriage as its moral justification. Divya also delicately strips sex of both scandal and cinematic perfection. In an intimate moment from Sudha and Chander's live-in relationship, Sudha casually asks Chander to undo her bra strap, and although this is not new to him, he still fumbles with it each time. Physical intimacy is neither punished nor turned into spectacle. It belongs instead to the awkward, habitual texture of their relationship. The novel's subversion becomes even sharper when the conventional sequence of womanhood—marriage first, motherhood afterwards—is overturned. Sudha insists that she wants a baby but is clear she does not want marriage. In this radical feminist imagination, Musafir Cafe frees motherhood from the authority of both men and the institution of marriage.

True, the endings of Sharat Chandra's Devdas and Dharamvir Bharati's Gunahon Ka Devta offer powerful templates of love in the Indian imagination. In both classic love stories, tragedy turns love into something monumental, an experience of renunciation, guilt, longing and permanent absence. Musafir Cafe, by contrast, inherits this tradition but translates it into the present, where heartbreak can be confessed in a message, revisited in casual conversation and gradually lived through friendship and new encounters. In unexpectedly earthy slang, Sudha's memorable line, "Yaar, yaad badi kutti cheez hoti hai, saali aa hi jaati hai" (Memory is a bitch—it always finds its way back), captures this shift perfectly.

Here, profound grief is compressed into the irreverent, everyday idiom of life. That is why love becomes a strangely intimate algorithm, captured in the novel's hallucinatory line, "Pyaar mein aadmi bla bla bla hokar hi reh jaata hai." (In love, a person simply ends up...blah blah blah) Here, "bla bla bla" names everything language cannot finally contain—love, longing, loss, desire, memory, foolishness, joy, separation and life itself. That may be the secret of the novel's appeal across generations: the young recognise the heat of desire, while silver-haired lovers know that love neither grows old nor goes cold.

What begins as a playful small-town story of love gradually turns into a philosophy of life in Musafir Cafe.

Golf, like family, brings people back

FAIRWAY FILES
Rahil Gangjee

GOLF HAS ALWAYS been a game of forgiveness. You hit a terrible shot, you get another one. You miss a three-footer, you get another hole. You lose a match, there is always another tournament. Apparently, this philosophy now applies to professional golf itself. After four years of behaving like two families who stopped speaking after a particularly ugly wedding, golf is once again discussing the possibility of everyone sitting at the same table.

LIV Golf has just finished its 2026 season, and its future is suddenly less certain than it looked when the whole thing began. Ian Poulter, one of LIV's most recognisable faces, admitted this week that he isn't sure whether he will continue. LIV has secured a non-binding term sheet for fresh investment for 2027, but the final agreement is still to be completed. Patrick Reed has already left LIV and is preparing to return to the PGA Tour.

This is golf, so naturally nobody agrees on how the reunion should work. Rory McIlroy has questioned what value some LIV players would bring back. Scottie Scheffler, on the other hand, has been more welcoming. His view is fairly simple: if Jon Rahm and Bryson DeChambeau are available, why wouldn't you want the best players playing against each other?

I understand both sides. When LIV arrived, it wasn't just another golf tour. It was a declaration of war, with enormous money, shorter events, team golf and a lot of very unhappy people. Players had to make choices. Some chose the PGA Tour. Some chose LIV. Some chose the money. Some chose principle. And some, if we are being honest, probably chose the option that involved the least amount of explaining to their accountant.

Now the golf world is wondering whether the divorce settlement might be more complicated than the divorce. Brooks Koepka has already shown that returning is possible. Patrick Reed is following. The question now is what happens if bigger names want to come back.

Imagine the locker room. "Welcome back." "Thanks." "Sorry about everything." "No problem." "By the way, you owe us $25 million." Actually, I was going to ask if you had a tee time? Golfers, thankfully, have short memories when there is a good fourball involved. The funny thing is that this is hardly new. Golf has always been full of rivalries that looked enormous from the outside and rather less important once the players got together.

Lee Trevino was one of the great characters of the game. When Tony Jacklin once tried to silence him before a round, telling him they didn't need to talk, Trevino's response was perfect: "You don't have to talk, Tony...you just have to listen."

That is probably the correct way to handle professional golf politics too. Listen. Smile. Then go hit your drive. Trevino also came from a time when golf was a very different business. Before the private jets and guaranteed contracts, he was hustling on municipal courses and playing money games. At the 1968 US Open, after shooting 69, he sat near the practice green in a golf cart with a beer—and nobody paid much attention to him. A few years later he was one of the biggest stars in the game.

That is the part of golf I find most amusing. The numbers change, the purses change, the equipment changes, but the players remain golfers.

Give a golfer enough money and he will still complain about a bad bounce. Give him a $10 million purse and he will still ask his caddie why the pin is in such a stupid place. And give him a 30-foot putt for a million dollars and he will still say, "I knew I had that one."

For Indian golf, the LIV-PGA story is particularly interesting because we have skin in the game. Anirban Lahiri is entering his fifth straight season with Bryson DeChambeau's Crushers GC. He has been part of the LIV experiment from the beginning and has experienced both its attractions and its complications. He is also one of the few Indians to have operated at that level of the global game for so long.

At the same time, Indian golf is becoming increasingly relevant on the other side of the divide. The DP World India Championship returns to Delhi Golf Club in October with a $4 million purse, and the field is already attracting major international names, including PGA Tour winner Min Woo Lee. Shubhankar Sharma and Lahiri are among the Indian names attached to the event.

And then there is another interesting development: the LIV-backed International Series India, which was scheduled to return to Prestige Golfshire, has been cancelled. That tells us something about how quickly the professional golf landscape can change. For years, Indian golf fans worried about whether our players could break into the big leagues. Now the bigger question is: which big league?

Maybe that is the real lesson from the last four years. Golf tried to divide itself into camps. But the sport itself refused to cooperate.

Fans still want to see Scheffler against Rahm. They want McIlroy against DeChambeau. They want the majors to mean something. They want the Ryder Cup. They want the best players in the world in the same tournament often enough to know who really is the best. Players, meanwhile, want to earn money, play good golf and have some control over their careers. None of these things are mutually exclusive.

At least they shouldn't be.

The Tour Championship this week is another reminder of what professional golf does best. Thirty of the best players in the world will gather, and this time everyone starts from scratch under the new format. No handicaps. No favours. Just golf. That is probably where all the arguments eventually end. And golf has a wonderfully brutal way of settling arguments. The ball doesn't care which tour you played on last week. It doesn't care how much you were paid. It doesn't care whether Rory likes you. It doesn't care whether Scottie welcomes you back. It certainly doesn't care about your Instagram following. It just sits there. And waits.

Maybe that is why I think a reunion is inevitable in some form. Golfers are competitors, but they are also addicted to competition. You can give them money, fame, teams and guarantees, but they want to know: "Can I beat him?" That is the oldest currency in golf. And if the PGA Tour and LIV finally figure out how to put the best players back in the same room, they may discover something the rest of us already know.

Golf is much more fun when everybody is fighting on the same golf course.

Small dreams too important to ignore

FIFTH COLUMN
TAVLEEN SINGH

ALMOST FROM THE day that Narendra Modi became prime minister, he has urged Indians to dream big dreams. At international events he has boasted often that India no longer has small dreams. And we have been reminded so often that by 2047 India will be a developed country that on social media, there are jokes about how the prime minister seems to believe that 2047 is the year that comes after 2026. Following Modi's lead, his chief ministers routinely tell us in expensive full-page newspaper advertisements and glittering TV promotions that their states, in keeping with the vision of Modi, are aiming to become trillion-dollar economies by 2047.

It is a good thing to dream big dreams. I totally support big dreams and have been very proud of the pace at which the Modi government and sundry other 'double-engine' governments have speeded up the building of glittering, new highways. They look dismal as they disintegrate when the rains come, but that is another story. I also support the idea of building 'smart cities' and bringing high-quality urban services to rural parts and have said more than once that Modi's toilet-building programme has been transformative. Those long lines of men squatting beside the tracks is no longer a common sight when you look out of the window of your Vande Bharat trains. But, in building big dreams some very important small dreams have been forgotten.

If you have been following the 'School Theek Karo' campaign of the Cuckoo Party, you would have been horrified by the state of rural schools. And this is not even half the story. Did you know that there are no properly trained teachers teaching in government schools? Trained teachers are not going to miraculously appear out of thin air. To create enough of them, we will need to build hundreds of thousands of teacher training schools. Some months ago, I quoted in this column the educationist, Michel Danino, saying this as the second of the three most important reforms needed. He believes that the District Institutes of Education and Training need a 'complete overhaul'. So does the entire education system so that children are taught to think and not learn by rote. Schools also need libraries, playgrounds, clean water and toilets.

These may sound like small things compared to national highways and bullet trains, but they are not. They might be more important. There are other small dreams that have been recklessly forgotten. There is the dream of having clean air in our cities, clean water in our sacred rivers and efficient waste management so that our 'smart cities' do not seem to be sprouting out of garbage dumps. A Yale University survey reported last week that when it came to environmental matters, India was at the very bottom of a list of 177 countries. Only Laos is dirtier and more degraded than India.

So instead of the big dream that has made not singing Vande Mataram a crime, what about making it a non-bailable offence for political leaders to forget the meaning of its first line? Sujalam, Suphalam, Malayaja-sitalam. A land of pure water, abundant fruit trees and clean air is what the poet described. And this is most certainly not an accurate description of our dear Bharat Mata as she is today. As for the damage reckless construction activity has done to our mountains, it is beyond criminal. The disaster last week in Nepal should remind our political leaders about what happens when the environment is criminally neglected.

What then has gone so wrong with our policies that they have brought us to this sorry pass? Could it be that in pursuit of big dreams, political leaders have forgotten the importance of small dreams? Have our policy-makers failed totally to notice that young Indians, among them school children, are now regularly taking to the streets to demand such small things as teachers and clean toilets in their schools? They also declare openly that what makes them feel most hopeless is the absence of decent jobs. It is true that in the past decade a handful of very rich Indians have got very much richer and are not shy of showing off their enormous wealth. Personally, I have no problem with this.

What I have a problem with is that millions more Indians have not got rich as well. Why has this not happened? Could it be because the Prime Minister lulled himself into believing that he had truly made doing business in India easier? It is not easier to do business for most Indians and one big reason for this is that corruption in his 'double-engine' governments is so deeply rooted at almost every level that only those who can pay huge bribes find it easier to do business.

In this time of big dreams, it is vital, if Modi wants to win back his fading popularity before that crucial election in Uttar Pradesh next year, that he personally concentrates on small things. And that he gets his high-flying chief ministers to plant their feet back firmly on the ground and explain why there have been so many big failures when it comes to the small dreams of ordinary Indians. The ugly truth is that below the shining highways that stand suspended today over towns and cities across India, far too many things have remained unchanged, and they need to start changing fast.

Mind & Games

In one of India's most climate-vulnerable regions, farmers, tourism workers and students are witnessing warmer winters, erratic rainfall and shrinking snow. But many struggle to understand what's driving these changes

Kashmiris can see CLIMATE CHANGE

MIR ZEESHAN

Apple farmer Sajad Mir doesn't need anyone to tell him the climate is changing. Growing up in Shopian, a hill district in southern Kashmir, he remembers stories of winters when heavy snowfall blanketed the Valley for months before slowly melting away. Today, the snow arrives late, disappears quickly and warmer winters have become the new normal. He has watched the changes unfold over the years, but like many others, he cannot explain why they are happening.

"Our elders narrate how there used to be heavy snowfall in winters... But we are now witnessing less snowfall and warmer winters, but we don't exactly know why it is happening," he says. His experience reflects a paradox playing out across Kashmir. Communities whose livelihoods depend on stable weather are already living with the impacts of climate change. Farmers speak of erratic rainfall and declining yields. Tourism workers worry about disappearing snow. Residents have experienced flash floods, hailstorms and rising temperatures. Yet many remain unfamiliar with the science behind these changes, or how that knowledge could help them prepare for what comes next. That gap in climate literacy matters. Recognising that the weather is changing is only the first step. Understanding why it is changing, how it could affect livelihoods and what can be done to adapt is increasingly becoming essential in one of India's most ecologically fragile regions.

Living with climate change

Sajad is not alone. Adil Reshi, a saffron grower from Letpora, Pulwama, says changing snowfall and rainfall patterns have reduced saffron production year after year. He attributes climate change broadly to pollution from industries and vehicles, but admits he knows little about concepts such as global warming, having encountered them only briefly in school. His uncertainty reflects the wider milieu. A recent survey by the Yale Program on Climate Change Communication found that 58% of Indians said they knew little or nothing about climate change, even though many reported experiencing extreme weather. The interviews conducted for this story suggest that Kashmir is no exception. Residents across rural and urban areas can describe changing seasons and unusual weather patterns, but many struggle to connect those experiences with the broader science of climate change.

That gap in climate literacy matters because adaptation begins with understanding. Farmers who don't know why rainfall patterns are changing may struggle to choose more resilient crops or adopt new farming practices. Tourism workers watching snow seasons shrink may not recognise that the shifts are part of a longer-term trend rather than isolated bad years. Communities that don't understand climate risks are also less likely to prepare for extreme weather, demand better public policies or take advantage of government programmes designed to build resilience. In a region where climate change is already reshaping agriculture, water resources and tourism, awareness is no longer just about education. It is becoming a prerequisite for adaptation. Environmentalist and RTI activist Raja Muzaffar says that while Kashmiris are witnessing the effects of climate change, public understanding of the science behind it remains weak. Even students of environmental science, he argues, often lack a clear understanding of how to protect the Valley's fragile ecosystems.

He believes climate education needs to become far more local. Students learn about the Amazon rainforest and distant oceans, he says, but spend little time understanding the Pir Panjal range, the Jhelum and Chenab rivers, Dal Lake or the mountain ecosystems that shape life in Jammu and Kashmir. His concerns are echoed in the Jammu and Kashmir Climate Change Action Plan, which acknowledges limited awareness of climate risks and resilience at every level, from government institutions to local communities. The plan proposes training programmes, awareness workshops and capacity building for community organisations as part of a broader effort to strengthen climate resilience.

Schools aren't preparing

If climate literacy begins in the classroom, teachers say the education system is falling short. Firdous Ahamed Shah, a secondary school teacher in Ganderbal, says climate science is taught only as part of a prescribed syllabus, leaving little room to explain how it affects students' own lives and surroundings. Environmental consultant and educator Sajad Ahmad agrees, arguing that many students leave school without understanding even basic concepts such as greenhouse gases, global warming or rising temperatures. Instead, curricula continue to focus on topics with little connection to the environmental challenges confronting the region today.

That experience resonates with students themselves. Hadi Sujha Sultan, a Class 8 student, says he first encountered climate change only last year in a geography lesson. While the chapter discussed causes such as pollution and deforestation, it offered little explanation of how climate change could affect people's lives or what communities could do to respond.

A knowledge gap

This disconnect cuts across professions, generations and geographies.

In Srinagar, a shop salesman says he has heard about climate change through television and social media, but knows little about the science behind it. A tea seller in the city says he has noticed hotter summers and shorter winters over the years, yet sees them as part of nature's cycle rather than a larger climatic shift. Others link changing weather to pollution or deforestation but struggle to explain how greenhouse gas emissions, rising global temperatures and local environmental changes are connected.

For many, climate change remains something they experience rather than understand. That distinction is important. People's observations of changing weather are often remarkably accurate. Farmers can tell when snowfall arrives later than it once did. Tourism operators know when ski seasons shorten. Residents can recall floods, cloudbursts and unusually warm winters. But without a broader understanding of climate science, these events are often viewed as isolated incidents rather than part of a long-term trend that demands new ways of planning, farming and managing natural resources. The result is a paradox. Kashmiris are already adapting instinctively to a changing climate, altering planting schedules, coping with water shortages or adjusting livelihoods. Yet many are doing so without the information that could help them anticipate future risks and make more informed decisions.

Turning awareness into resilience

Recognising this gap, policymakers have begun to place greater emphasis on climate awareness.

The Jammu and Kashmir Climate Change Action Plan identifies limited public awareness as a major obstacle to climate resilience. It calls for awareness campaigns, training programmes, community participation, institutional capacity building and climate education to help residents better understand the risks they face and the choices available to them. CPI(M) leader and MLA Mohammad Yousuf Tarigami has also argued that climate literacy must become part of the region's development agenda, warning that awareness is essential if communities are to respond effectively to increasingly frequent climate-related disasters.

For Kashmir, the challenge is not about convincing people that the climate is changing - the evidence is all around them. The task is to bridge the gap between experience and understanding, so that awareness translates into action and communities are better equipped to adapt to a warmer, less predictable future.

In Kakuro sum puzzles, the numbers in the black squares refer to the SUMS of the digits, which you are to fill into the empty spaces directly below or to the right of the black square containing the number. No zeroes are used here, only the digits one through nine. An important point: A digit cannot appear more than once in any particular digit combination.

WINDFALL
Both vulnerable and you are the first to speak with S - HA - x - x DK 9 - x - x - C A - x - x - x. Do you open? Of course, you should. You have two and a half quick tricks. You also have a comfortable rebid of 2C after you open 1D. Bidding goes:
W N E S
1D 1S 1NT 4S
What do you do?
You don't know if partner has clubs nor there is a diamond fit. However, partner has shown a smattering of values. So, you double! Partner leads the D9. Dummy hits:
S - N
HA 8 3 S
DK 8 6 4 2
CAT 8 5 3
(Dummy)
SQJ 9 7
H QJ 6 5 3
C 2
How the play went: Dummy plays small and you win with the king. Declarer wins your diamond return with his queen and plays a spade. Partner rushes with the ace, puts you in with a club. You cash HA and give partner a diamond ruff. She cashes the HK, and they are three down vulnerable. Result: + 800 to E-W and you score 93%. The complete hands were:
S KT 8 6 5 4
HT 2
D QT 7
CKJ
S - N SA 3 2
HA 8 3 HK 7 4
DK 8 6 4 2 D 9 5
CAT 8 5 3 CQ 9 7 6 4
SQJ 9 7
H QJ 6 5 3
C 2

You can see 5C is on for EW which many did not reach. Little did I imagine the double would net us 800. Let us say, south decides to pass east's 1NT. West will rebid 2C which east may raise to 3C or 4C. West is bound to pass, as he is scratch minimum. When you have values, it is highly unlikely the opponents will bid game. Taking all things into consideration, the best action with the south hand is to pass. Advance save of 4S against what? 3NT? Why? You can lead the SQ and beat the contract by three tricks! Sometimes I wonder why and who started this concept of 'save'. On equal vulnerability it is frivolous, if you ask me.

Nepal may need $4 bn-$5 bn to rebuild

More than 2 bn NPR collected for PM disaster fund

AGENCIES
August 29

NEPAL MAY NEED $4 billion to $5 billion to rebuild after this week's devastating floods, Finance Minister Swarnim Wagle told Reuters on Saturday, a bill equal to nearly a tenth of the economy.

"The initial estimate is $4-$5 billion. Just an estimate," Wagle said. "We will require much less than what we needed for the 2015 earthquake. Loss and damage is being assessed."

Meanwhile, more than 2.2 billion Nepalese rupees (NPR) has been collected for Nepal Prime Minister's Disaster Relief Fund (PMDRF) by Friday night. The fund received NPR 1.91 billion within 36 hours from Wednesday afternoon to Thursday midnight, while assistance worth NPR 385.5 million was donated on Friday alone, according to sources at the Prime Minister's Office. The Ministry of Finance said the deposits were made to accounts held at 10 different commercial banks.

torrent of rock, ice, mud and debris through Himalayan mountain river systems, killing at least 675 people in Nepal and seven in China's Tibet as it swallowed buildings, bridges and power stations in its path.

Nearly 3,000 people are still missing – about 2,426 in Nepal and at least 554 in Tibet's

Gyirong County – including at least 540 foreigners, many of them Hindu pilgrims from India. The flood levelled towns in the border area, sweeping away bridges and roads and damaging major hydropower stations. Wagle did not elaborate on why the reconstruction bill was expected to be less than the $9 billion spent after the 2015 magnitude-7.8 quake, Nepal's worst recorded disaster which killed nearly 9,000 people, destroyed more than half a million homes and caused losses estimated at around a third of Nepal's economy. Wednesday's

India closely monitoring situation

INDIA IS CLOSELY monitoring the flood situation in Nepal and extending all possible assistance to the neighbouring country, Minister of State for External Affairs Kirti Vardhan Singh said on Saturday.

"Our embassy provided a number so we could keep a close watch on the situation, and identify where assistance was needed," Singh added. ANI floods will nevertheless be a major blow to an economy reliant on remittances, tourism and hydropower, damaging power projects that account for more than 12% of national generating capacity.

With the deaths in the deluge having occurred three days ago, authorities said some bodies now being recovered had decomposed beyond recognition. They would be buried after legal formalities because of health risks and a fear of epidemics. "DNA samples will be collected, and the bodies will be buried in an open space," the Chitwan district administration said in a notice.

Nepal's Foreign Minister Shisir Khanal said the country did not need help with search and rescue operations but required assistance in rescuing people stuck in tunnels, opening transport and communication lines in places where bridges were destroyed, identification of dead bodies, DNA testing and storing bodies for longer durations.

Nepal had requested India and China to help construct 42 Bailey bridges to resume transport services in the flood-hit areas. An 11-member Indian team arrived in Nepal on Saturday to assist local authorities in rescue operations. China has dispatched five tunnel experts from its Tibet region to Nepal for flood-related rescue work, Chinese state news agency Xinhua said on Saturday.

New Delhi has sent three flights carrying about 60 tonnes of relief material to Nepal, including blankets, medicines, food and water purification tablets, and plans to also dispatch a tunnel rescue team and a medical team. India has also offered its disaster response force and prefabricated bridges along with technical teams to help restore connectivity, the foreign ministry said.

Ankle injury rules Neeraj Chopra out of Asian Games

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, August 29

IN A SETBACK for India's athletics campaign at the Asian Games, Olympic champion Neeraj Chopra on Saturday announced that he will miss the remainder of the 2026 season, including the Continental showpiece in Japan, after suffering a ligament tear in his ankle during training.

Chopra said he sustained the injury shortly after producing a season-best throw at the Lausanne Diamond League.

"After a period of hard work, I finally felt I was gaining the momentum I had been looking for with a season's best throw in Lausanne.

"Unfortunately, shortly after, I sustained a ligament tear in my ankle during training. After discussions with my doctor and team, we've decided that I will sit out the rest of this season," Chopra said in a post on Instagram.

The 28-year-old javelin thrower said the decision was disappointing as he felt he was

"close to finding my rhythm", but added that his immediate focus would be on recovery. "My focus now is on recovering well and coming back even stronger," he said. While his focus now shifts towards rehabilitation, the athlete has made it clear that he intends to return to competition after recovering fully from the injury.

"It's disappointing, especially because I felt close to finding my rhythm. But as they say, setbacks are a part of the journey," he said. "Thank you all for the love and support," Chopra added. The injury means he will also miss the Diamond League Finals in Brussels on September 5 though he had qualified for it.

Chopra's withdrawal is a major setback for India at the Asian Games, where he was expected to be one of the medal hopes. The Tokyo Olympics gold medalist had endured a challenging phase in the build-up to the second half of the season, but his performance in Lausanne had offered encouragement that he was finding his rhythm.

OpenAI to cut off AI models for SpaceX

REUTERS
August 29

OPENAI SAID ON Friday that it plans to stop providing AI models to Cursor, the coding-tool company now owned by Elon Musk's SpaceX, marking an escalation in the rivalry between OpenAI CEO Sam Altman and Musk.

"We are making this choice because we cannot be confident that SpaceX will use our technology within our terms of service, based on our experience with Elon Musk's companies violating contracts," OpenAI said in a blog post.

Musk responded early on Saturday in an X post, writing, "I couldn't care less."

Iran acknowledges war toll on economy but signals no retreat

REUTERS
Dubai/Cairo, August 29

IRANIAN LEADERS ARE acknowledging the economic toll of war with the US, with the supreme leader urging the government to address the hardship and the president saying foreign trade has shrunk by a third due to the American sanctions and blockade.

Yet Tehran signalled no retreat on Saturday, vowing to withstand US pressure, pursue diplomacy and maintain what it said was control over the Strait of Hormuz, the strategic waterway giving Iran leverage through its ability to disrupt global energy markets.

The government said in a statement on state media that addressing economic pressures caused by sanctions and war was a central focus, including curbing inflation, managing markets, creating jobs, directing investment towards domestic production and gradually reducing dependence on the dollar. Six months after the US and Israel launched the war, negotiations are at an impasse and President Donald Trump's administration has stepped up efforts to punish Iran financially with what it has billed as an "economic D-Day".

US is taking partial control of Venezuela's oil reserves: Trump

REUTERS
Washington, August 29

PRESIDENT DONALD TRUMP on Friday announced an unprecedented US push to take control of a fifth of Venezuela's vast oil reserves, betting that American companies can revive the OPEC nation's battered energy industry while delivering a new source of crude to help bring down US fuel prices.

Trump provided few details about the agreement, saying only that the US had secured majority control of more than 65 billion barrels of Venezuela's proven oil reserves through a partnership with private business. The South American nation's leader welcomed the agreement, saying it would boost the economy and government revenue.

NEW CONTROL

■ Secured majority control of more than 65 billion barrels of oil reserves

■ Venezuela holds the world's largest proven oil reserves

The new deal would represent a dramatic expansion of the US role in Venezuela's oil industry as the Trump administration seeks to revive the country's production and secure more crude for US refineries. Venezuela holds the world's largest proven oil reserves but produces only about 1.25 million barrels per day, far below its potential after years of underinvestment, mismanagement and sanctions. "At my direction, Secretary of State Marco Rubio, and Secretary of War Pete Hegseth, working closely with Highly Respected Interim President of Venezuela, Delcy Rodriguez, and, through a partnership with private business, have secured majority US control of more than 65 billion barrels of proven oil reserves in Venezuela, at no cost to the American Taxpayer," Trump wrote on Truth Social.

The announcement followed weeks of US-Venezuela negotiations over a deal that would give American companies long-term access to oil fields and guarantee the resulting crude supply to the US.
